TOWN COUNCIL MEETING

Council Chamber,
March 5th, 1923.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening, Mayor A. MacGregor in the chair.

Present—Reeve Hambly and Councillors Paul, Burgess, Tustin, Huffman, Perry, Hartman.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from the Law Construction Co., Toronto, on construction and surface treatment of roads.

Referred to Streets Committee.

A repbrt from the Town Treasurer giving amounts spent by the different committees, and other expeditures to date, was read before the council.

The Finance Committee reported that there was about $7000.00 uncollected taxes still outstanding, notwithstanding the notice sent out that all taxes should be paid by March 1st. Ways and means were discussed by the council as to the best method of collecting those arrears Some thought drastic steps shoud be taken, while some of the others were in favor of some more persuasive methods.

Moved by Coun. Burgess, seconded by Coun. Paul, that April 1st be the date fixed for the final payment of the 1922 taxes. And after that date proceedings will be taken to collect all unpaid taxes. Carried.

Mr. Dunkley, representing the Law Construction Co., of Toronto, addressed the council in reference to oiling the streets. He said he thought the same programme as followed last year would again prove as satisfactory. If the order for the oil was given at this date his company would supply the oil and spread the same for a cost of 15c. per gallon. This price would cover all the necessary work, except spreading the ballast over the oil.

The question of the purchase of road oils for the streets was referred to the Streets Committee to report at next meeting of council.

The Market and Police Committee reported recommending that the license for a taxi license be fixed at $15.00 for a single automobile, and $5.00 for each additional car, $5.00 for a single horse, $10.00 for a team, and $15.00 for a livery. Also that a license fee of $2.00 be charged for cutting meat on the open market.

Report adopted.

A by-law was passed appointing Night Constable Cook, Sanitary Inspector, for the year 1923, at a salary of $100.

The following accounts were ordered paid:

"LOSS FULLY COVERED BY INSURANCE"

COMFORTABLE PHRASE THAT NEEDS THE COMFORT KNOCKED OUT OF IT.

During the last month the local fire brigade has received six or seven calls to different parts of the town where the cause has been stove pipes or chimneys burning out. Fortunately the loss sustained has been practically nothing, but had they occurred in the middle of the night, the result might have been far different. The fact that this winter the residential and business section of the town has been heated with wood, and inferior coal, has added considerable to the risks, and should act as an incentive for everybody to see that their stove pipes and chimneys are kept cleaned. Napanee has been very fortunate, considering what other surrounding towns and cities have suffered from fires this winter. Read what one writer has to say about this question.

"When a man insures his life, does he look forward contentedly to death because "the loss is fully covered by insurance?" Every fire is an industrial death. The burned industry is dead, and stays dead, till it is laboriously built up again. The fire insurance company hasn't an ounce of raw material in its till, not a screw or a screw driver, nor a rivet or a wheel. All it has is dollars—and all the dollars in Canada, piled up high to-gether, couldn't produce a penny's worth of anything by themselves.

"The citizen who fails to insure against fire is about as sensible as the man who sleeps on a railroad track. If the $32,000,000 fire loss in Canada last year had not been covered by insurance, it would have meant a series of financial smash-ups that, like a falling row of cards, would have involved the whole business of Canada in serious trouble.

But the man who covers his risk fully by insurance, and then fails to protect his property against fire in every posible way, is only less foolish and not more laudable than the man who doesn't insure at all. Insurance doesn't prevent fires. Insurance can replace, but it cannot restore. Every burned equipment, every bit of destroyed material, is so much wasted forever. By being destroyed before it has done the fruitful work designed for it, it has wasted natural recources and the work of the whole chain of industries—miners, iron and steel furnaces, and thousands of craftsmen. Insurance can finance the individual's money loss. It cannot cover loss to the community, loss to customers, loss to business men who had counted on suppying his needs.

We want to see the time when every fire loss is covered financially by insurance. We also want to see such a vivid and painful understanding of the word 'waste' that every citizen, when he hears a fire, will feel keenly that he personally has been subjected to tribute by the universal enemy."

Only four weeks, on Wednesday and Thursday to get your tickets for the "Nautical Knot." Wonderland Theatre, April 4th and 5th."

AN OLD ONE ON HEREDITRY.

A little boy who was very much puzzled over the theory of evolution, questioned his mother thus: "Mamma, am I descended from a monkey?"

"I don't know," the mother replied. "I never knew any of your father's people."

HIDE AND SEEK.

One day while a farmer and his men were digging potatoes, a tramp came along and stopped to watch the workers. The boss, being short of help, asked the vagrant if he wanted a job.

The man of leisure replied, "Sure! What do I have to do?"

"Dig potatoes."

The tramp started to walk away, and with a look of disgust replied, "Let the man who planted them dig them. He knows where he put them."—Judge.

THE LATE JOHN WALSH

The funeral of the late John F. Walsh, one of the oldest and most respected residents of Napanee, took place at St. Patrick's church, on Tuesday, February 27th, 1923. The funeral was largely attended.

Rev. Fathr O'Connor delivered a deserving tribute to the memory of the deceased. He said, in part: "Be therefore always prepared and live in such a manner that death may never find thee unprovided." These words are taken from the little book, "The Imitation of Christ." To pay honor to the dead, we living are gathered here to-day.

My dear Christian friends in the mind and purpose of God and His Holy Church, in the hearts of all sincere thinking Christians, a sermon that is a thousand times more eloquent than any human words can utter, is preached from the coffin, which incloses the form of every human being. The dead speak to us from the silence of their coffins a salutary lesson and warning, conveying a truth absolute and inevitable in these words, "Hodie mihi,, cras tibi", "To-day it is I, to-morrow it is you," but, unfortunately for many the very commonness and familiarity of death has nullified its purpose and has lost its great signification. However, my brethren, the Church has no particular service for any particular station in life. We all lack that perfection which entitles us to heavenly citizenship and therefore we all need help, hence the usual silence of the church my dear friends in the presence of the dead who lie beyond the reach of our feeble praise. Her service, my dear friends, is rather the ritual of prayer.

At the same time, my dear friends, the life and the practical faith of the late John Walsh was such as to call for recognition and appreciation from the Church he loved and served so well.

John Walsh had a good, honest, charitable heart and he meant well. He had his faults, but who has not. "He who, is without them," said Christ the Saviour on one occasion, "let him cast the first stone." The deceased has to his credit a laborious and honest past. His life in private and public was replete with deeds that will count for much when the Score of Life is hung up on the final day of reckoning. Like many another man who rose to worldly success, he was obliged to face the world single handed and alone, with no better assets than a strong faith, a sound intelligence and unfailing honesty and an enterprising and ambitious spirit. He owed nothing to Academies or Colleges. His University was the school of the world where he learned events and where he met and associated with men.

My dear friends throughout his strenuous and varied life, the charactr and personality of John Walsh remained the same, simple and upright to the end. Success came to him in abundance but it left him as it found him, plain, honest, generous John Walsh.

In this parish where he was born and brought up his memory will remain precious and abiding. To his pre-eminent liberality and unstinted and timely benefactions the enlargement and adornment of this Temple of God, must in a great measure be justly ascribed; and my dear friends as a final mark of his faith and of his devotion and affection for his estimable partner in life, who only a short time ago predeceased him, he donated to her memory the sweet toned organ of this Church. Oh yes, my dear friends, the good deeds of John Walsh will live long after him, as they are now we hope and trust recorded to his perpetual memory in the Book of Life, and these records, my dear friends, of his Christian zeal and devotional service will I trust, prove an incentive and inspiration for us all. May his death, which he accepted with firm hope and holy resignation, prove a lasting comfort and consolation to his lonely sister and his dear relatives. May God grant eternal rest and peace to the soul of the faithful, generous and devoted John Walsh. Amen."

Prof. W. T. Baird very kindly assisted with the music during the Mass and rendered very beautifully "The Dead March" and "In a Monastery Garden." He also accompanied Miss Frances Dwyer, who sang "Lead Kindly Light" and "Nearer My God to Thee," at the request of the relatives of the deceased, the two hymns being favorites of the late Mr. Walsh and his deceased wife.

In the death of Mr. John Walsh St. Patrick's Church, Napanee, has lost its most generous benefactor, and the town and community has lost a splendid citizen.

HIGHEST TRIBUTE PAID TO DECEASED SOLON

MEMBERS OF THREE PARTIES ALIKE LAUD LATE REGINALD A. FOWLER, M.P.P.

Through their various Leaders, all parties in the Ontario Legislature Monday joined in paying tribute to the character and sterling qualities of Reginald A. Fowler, Conservative member for Lennox, whose death occurred Monday afternoon. His home was at Emerald, Amherst Island, Lennox County. Out of respect for his memory the House adjourned at 6 o'clock until 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

HIS QUALITIES EULOGIZED.

In suggesting evening adjournment, Hon. G. H. Ferguson, Conservative Leader, eulogized the personal qualities of the late member for Lennox. "Those of us who know him," he said, "who know something about his history and career, not only locally, but as a member of the Legislature, I am quite sure, have nothing but the warmest admiration for his character. With all those who came intimately in contact with him he not only earned respect, but greated the warmest admiration and devotion for his many splendid qualities."

F. Wellington Hay, Liberal Leader, also paid high tribute to the late member and now recalling the comparatively recent bereavements of the Liberal party, he said that the Liberals remembered the kind sympathy which had been extended from all sections of the House, and now paid its respect to a deeply esteemed Conservative member. "Mr. Fower," he said, "was a man whose word was his bond; a man whose thought and whose desire was that in the discharge of his duties he might utilize his best thought and energies in the interests of the Province of Ontario as a whole."

MAN OF QUIET CULTURE.

Premier Drury recalled a Sunday spent at the home of the late member many years ago, and said that in his home, as well as in his pubic life, Mr. Fowler was a man who earned the affection and esteem of his fellow-men. "He was a man of quiet culture," Hon. Mr. Drury said, "of high and gentlemanly ideas, a delightful man to meet in his home, the soul of hospitality, the soul of kindness, and my good opinion, formed in early years, has not lost anything by subsequent associations with him in public life. I wish to add my tribute to his worth."

K. K. Homuth, Labor member for South Waterloo, recalled pleasant moments spent with the late Mr. Fowler in quiet talks, when the late member was wont to observe that he was the oldest and Mr. Homuth the youngest member of the House. Mr. Homuth paid high tribute to his personal qualities.

The late Mr. Fowler was born in 1845 at Amherst Island, the son of Daniel Fowler, a prominent water-color artist. He took part in the Northwest Rebellion, in the Red River Expedition; was a farmer by profession; was Reeve of Amherst Island for five years, and Warden of Lennox and Addington in 1903. He was formerly a Colonel in the militia, and was first elected to the Legislature in 1914, and was re-elected in 1919.

DESERONTO.

Manager Naylor is having the interior of his theatre painted and he expects to have everything in first-class shape for the opening in Easter week.

Thomas Thompson, charged with violating the O.T.A., was brought up for hearing on Friday and the case was dismissed by Magistrate H. P. Bedford.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Brown, of Hay Bay, entertained a large number to a dance on Wednesday evening last. The music was supplied by Houle Bros.' orchestra, of Deseronto, and everyone reported a splendid time.

Clayton Brant who was brought from Hamilton last Monday on a charge of non-support, was given a hearing on Friday before Magistrate H. R. Bedford, and was dismissed for lack of evidence.

Mr. W. S. Herrington, of Napanee, gave an illustrated address on Friday night in the White Hall under the auspices of the Women Citizens' League. Mr. Herrington had as his subject "Glimpses of Europe." His lecture was enjoyed by all who were present, and the coffers of the League were augmented by a goodly sum.

The Deseronto and District Returned Men's Club is preparing for the summer months and are going to be well represented in the fields of sports. Committees have been named and these are working hard on the summer's program.

Confirmation was celebrated in St. Mark's Anglican church on Sunday last, by the Bishop of Ontario, assisted by the rector, Rev. C. E. S. Radcliffe. The special music rendered by the choir was appreciated by a large congregation.

Wilfred McKendry, across the Bay, while assisting in cutting ice on Wednesday, slipped slipped in the water and received a cold bath, but fortunately was rescued by some of the men who were near.

The Quinte Glass Company are busy installing machinery into their new factory, which was formerly the Woodturning Products building.

The Home and School Association met last Friday in the public school and it was decided to secure the services of a regular nurse also a medical inspector. The club is in a flourishing condition and the school is much benefited by it.

ROBINSON'S SPRING STYLE SHOW AND MERCHANDISE EXHIBITION

WAS A MAGNIFICENT SUCCESS FROM EVERY VIEWPOINT.

On Friday and Saturday large crowds of women from town and country-side gathered at The Robinson Co. Store to see their Annual Spring Exhibit of new materials and new styles.

Two large floors were given over to this display and never were exhibits more pleasingly or artistically arranged.

On entering the main doorway you were immediately brought in contact with a wonderful display of new fabrics. This season color plays one of the most important roles, one would judge from the pleasing, colorful materials which were draped from ledges or counters and on tables in the aisles. Interesting too, was the many Paisley effects featured in the display of silks. These were usually combined with plain colors. The complete effect was very Oriental and quite in harmony with the present vogue.

Passing down the aisle you passed counter after counter exhibiting choice designs in woollen suitings, coatings, skirtings and then numerous accessories.

The rear section of the store was a mass of glowing color, which was derived from drapes of colorful chintz. linens, too, for the home, came in for much attention.

The centre aisle on the ground floor was used for displaying new Easter neck-wear, gloves and hosiery.

The men's store was also attractively decorated with displays of men's apparel, featuring the various new styles and colors in suits, overcoats, hats, caps, neckwear, shirts and hosiery.

Hanging baskets filled with colored roses, suspended from the arches in the ceiling also added more charm to this already charming floor.

Presently music was heard from the second floor, which was a warning that the parade of styles was about to commence. On this floor we found a goodly-sized theatre with its chairs in semi-circle, with its stage, with its foot-lights and its beautiful floral decorations. Very quickly all seats were occupied and a great many were forced to stand. Then for two complete hours, these specially trained, professional mannequins, especially imported for the occasion, paraded the platform, wearing the new dresses, the coats and wraps and the suits. Each costume was complete with a beautiful becoming hat.

This year Fashion has introduced the Russian or blouse back style to her otherwise straight-line silhouette At the same time she introduces the one ornament fastening. Skirt lengths in some types of garments are longer, sleeves come in all lengths, while neck-lines are to be had in practically all styles, varying from the ordinary round neck-line to the newer standing and draped collar. Embroideries in silk and straw are a part of many really exclusive garments.

The "Three-piece Suit" is being sponsored again this season. It comes usually with the waist attached to the skirt, which is most frequently of some contrasting color. Grey and Biege are the most popular shades for waists. The Jaquette style of coat, with its snug fitting hip-band, is another decidedly new feature. Suit skirts show more variation in style than for many past seasons. Suits in tailored styles were also displayed in large numbers. These have longer coats and are ornamented with belts, fine tuckings and pockets.

Separate coats also show many style diversions. The "Blouse-Back" treatment is especially good. Its long graceful line carries much charm. Large fancy ornamental buckles are employed for fastenings. These coats are developed in materials as Velour, Duvetyn, Vel-de-laine, Tricotine and Poiret Twill.

Dresses for spring find much of their charm in the wide variety of colors that are obtainable. Here, too, the straight-line silhouette which however, is frequently broken by an artistic drape. Sleeves in dresses vary from mere straps at the shoulders to real long wrist lengths. Two-toned effects are very fashionable in dress circles.

Spring Millinery too, offers many unusual variations. Possibly the newest creation is found in the many versions of "The Poke" shape. This charming hat, with its high crown, droops over the eyes in a manner which is becoming to most women, and especially amoung the younger set. Large floral wreaths, huge ribbon bows, feathers and novelty ornaments are employed in numerous artistic ways for trimmings.

This wonderful, confusing panorama of styles, materials and colorings, were presented three times and on each occasion the spacious accommodations were taxed to the utmost. The Robinson Co. is indeed to be congratulated upon the wonderful collection of fine merchandise they have assembled and upon this modern method they have adopted in presenting it to the public.

The music for this occasion was supplied in a most acceptable manner by Mrs. B. M. Black, from a piano installed by Mr. R. B. Allen.

ON CANADIAN LIBERTY

IT IS BETTER THAN THE UNITED STATES VARIETY.

Mrs. Katharine Fullerton Gerould, Traveled and World-Informed Literary Woman, Living In the Republic South of Us, Expresses Her Opinion of the Dominion Which Is Flattering to Our Vanity.

To be free and happy live in Canada. A traveled and brilliant American, Mrs. Katharine Fullerton Gerould, gives the recipe in Harper's Magazine. In Canada she felt "a very present sense of freedom and a sharp prospective nostalgia." She found that "the whole port and demeanor of men and women was that of free and sober citizens, privileged to think and speak as they chose, so long as they kept their hands clean of injury to others." Moreother, they look happy. "Have you ever noticed that no one looks happy in our city?"

We haven't noticed it, comments the New York Times, but since divers native and imported sociologists have recorded it as a fact, doubtless there is something to be said for their theory. The sober citizens of most Canadian provinces are restrained in their freedom, as many of us view it. The state interferes with their liberty of private habit and seeks to make them obtain abstainers by law. Americans, too, are privileged to think and speak as they choose, so long as they keep their hands clean of injury to others.

Mrs. Gerould complains a great deal about the restraints on free speech in the United States. Legal restraints are the same in the United States as in Canada. Every citizen is free to speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects. He is responsible for the abuse of that right. Absolute freedom of speech or the press doesn't exist either in Great Britain or in the United States. Mrs. Gerould's hero is George Washington, seldom quoted nowadays, except in regard to entangling alliances. That quotation is the most indicable misquotation. Perhaps our traveler into Canada is not altogether more accurate about the "passing of the American spirit" than about the views of her hero about alliances. She says:

The basic fact of American institutions was liberty; the freedom of the individual under the law. America is not really a free country, in the old sense; and liberty is, increasingly, a rhetorical figure.

Now, "liberty" means different things in different countries, and ideas about it change; but even if the unconscious or conscious socialistic legislation of the modern state has shorn off some of the earlier liberty, liberty is still "the freedom of the individual under the law." The American can't "play the lottery," or—in theory—buy a drink; his curtailed liberty, like his untailed liberty, is "under the law." Mrs. Gerould illustrates Dominion freedom of speech by the public statement of one of the Ministers that "they wanted no immigrants save those who were 'British, white and Christian.'" She asks us to imagine the effect if any "prominent citizen" of our own country should dare to talk in that way. The Dominion politicians talk in that way unreasonably, because the majority of Canadians like it. In our own composite population a more tolerant and wider view, fortunately, prevails. Still, Mr. Henry Ford, a preter-prominent citizen, utters continually sentiments in part consistent with the Canadian freedom of speech. Does "a storm of reproach and insult" burst upon him? No, he bows his head before "Presidential lightning."

Mrs. Gerould's illustration shows that the Canadian notion of tolerance, a virtue she much insists upon, is not of the widest. She is indignant at coercion and the mob spirit and the boycotting of pro-Germans in the war. Apparently she supposes that Americans "of the old rock" were patterns of tolerance. A month after the beginning of the War of 1812 a Baltimore mob attacked the office of the Federal Republican, which had been bitter against the war. The editors and their friends gathered to protect them surrendered to the authorities and were taken to jail. The mob forced the jail, "beat and tortured the prisoners, and on the prison steps left four of them mutilated bodies." Gen. Lingan was killed. "Light Horse Harry" Lee, another veteran of the Revolution, was crippled for life. The "old stock" was at least not more tolerant of free speech and a free press nor more law-abiding than its successor. It is true, however, as Mrs. Gerould says, that:

With our increasing American tendency to write our prejudices upon the statute books and to turn personal preferences, if we can, into law, we are jeopardizing our ancient freedom more and more seriously. Legislatures can be momentarily frightened into doing almost anything.

This is the unclean spirit of coercion, and it ought to be exorcised. Organized fanaticism, whether it make the law, like the Anti-Saloon League, or break it, like the Ku Klux Klan, is the enemy. Artistic and literary censorship is at once a joke, an imposition and a nuisance. Propaganda of many sorts is at work all the time. It may be that we, the Socialist State is built up without acknowledging its origin, "liberty" will become a great congeries of prohibitions, but either the majority wants restrictions upon its liberty or isn't clever and brave enough to resist them. Action at the polls is needed, not lamentation about an imaginary throttling of free speech and about the triumph of fanatics. Let us either, rouse zealotry or stop whining about it.

Cautious.

An old sailor who was being tried by court-martial had been so impressed with the instructions of the young officer detailed for his defence that he determined to exercise the greatest care as to qualifying evidence. So when the president of the court asked him his name he answered, "Bill Taylor, or words to that effect."

ARMOUR'S NEW CHIEF

He Began His Career as a Car Checker.

J. Edson White has become president of Armour & Co., the largest meat packers in the world, and is the first president of the concern not a member of the Armour family. He is the latest of American business men, hitherto known only to their associates, to get on the front page of the press and to have his career recited as an encouragement to others. Presently, we have no doubt, the newspapers will be seeking him out to get his views on the French invasion of the Ruhr, the Ku Klux Klan and the influence of Sandberg upon American poetry. The rise of Mr. White has not been spectacular, but it has been steady, and one of the interesting things it has proved is that his estimate of his abilities made when he was a young man was a correct one, something that is unusual, as most will admit. He felt that he was destined for big things, and time has proved him correct.

Another curious thing is that Mr. White is the son of a man who was driven out of business by the firm of which he is now the chief. His father was a packer in Peoria, and the son's first contact with the cattle business was made by driving cattle to his father's slaughter house. But it was not long before his father's customers took to buying the dressed beef that came from Chicago on the Armour refrigerator cars, and he went out of business. The son after that took a position with another Peoria firm. Later he went to San Francisco, and in a short time had worked himself up to the position of city salesman of the Western Packing Co. at a salary of $70 a week. That was some twenty-seven years ago, when White was twenty-two years old. He was well paid, and might reasonably have considered himself as quite a big frog in the small puddle of the commercial life of San Francisco. He looked ahead and saw no glorious future. Reasonable prosperity he was assured of, but not a great position such as he believed he was capable of filling.

It was then he made the most momentous decision of his life. He came to the conclusion that what was of prime importance to him was thoroughly to learn the packing business. It followed that the place to learn it was in Chicago. Having come to these conclusions, Mr. White gave up his good job in San Francisco and went to Chicago. There, he was employed by Armour as a car checker at $18 a week. He was no longer even a small frog in a big puddle. He was an unregarded tadpole in the vast concern then presided over by Phil Armour. For six months he checked cars, and then he was made a clerk in the dressed meat department. While there he had occasion to notice the sheep department, and after some reflecting thereon, he summoned up his courage and made his way to the office of Mr. Armour.

"Sir," he said, "I think I can increase efficiency in the sheep department," and he proceeded to tell him he had thought was a mistake in the system and how it might be remedied. Armour listened glowering, and the presumptuous clerk feared that he would be discharged for venturing to step over department heads and take up the time of the great man with what was after all a small matter. After musing for some minutes, Mr. Armour said, "Well, go and do it."

"But," began the clerk.

"Go and do it," repeated Armour, and turned again to his desk. So White went to the sheep department and told the manager what instructions he had received, and then proceeded to prove that he knew what he was talking about.

So successful was he that he remained in the sheep department, which continued to expand for eleven years. Then he was appointed assistant to the vice-president. In 1912 he was made a member of the board of directors, and in 1914 a vice-president in his own right. The war brought him his greatest opportunity. Every pound of meat bought from the Armour people by the Allied governments was bought through White, who came to be regarded as one of the greatest salesmen in the world. At the end of the war he was placed in charge of all the foreign business of the firm, and established branches in South America, France, England and Australia. Of particular interest to Canadians is the career of Mr. White, in view of the fact that in 1900 he married Miss Lilian Pearson, of Collingwood. He has three children, and his hobbies are golf and the cultivation of a fine farm some distance from Chicago.

Hardinge's Resignation.

Many rumors are afloat regarding the significance of the resignation of Lord Hardinge as British Ambassador to France, since it is known that he has been, during the two years of his service in Paris, one of the most important influences making for friendship between the two countries at a time when many influences were leading in the other direction. Lord Hardinge has had a distinguished diplomatic career, having served in Washington, Sofia, Bucharest, Berlin, Paris, Constantinople, Tehran, Petrograd, and Calcutta, and having entered the Foreign Office service more than forty years ago. He was created by King Edward as one of the most promising of British diplomatists, and has many remarkable achievements to his credit. Not the least was his work as Viceroy in India during the crucial years from 1910 to 1916. There is little wonder, therefore, that his resignation has aroused widespread comment.

Volcanoes In England.

No active volcanoes exist in England, though there is ample scientific evidence that in the long ago the area which we now call the British Isles suffered from eruptions. Indeed, large parts of our coasts must have been actually formed by volcanic action.

Some of the Western Isles of Scotland are actually extinct volcanoes.

Wastwater Lake—in the Lake District—is believed by some scientists to be the mouth of a dead volcano, while other craters existed in Wales, in Devonshire, and in Charnwood Forest in Leicestershire.

The hot springs of Bath are probably the only active survivals of our volcanic system.

HOW TO CONSTUCT A HOT-BED

Garden crops such as tomatoes, cabbage, lettuce and celery can be greatly advanced in the spring by the use of hot-beds. On the farm the making of such a bed is a simple matter, because of the presence of manure of a suitable kind. Whereas the greenhouse has to depend on steam heating for the necessary warmth, the heat for a hot-bed is secured from that arising from fresh manure. The hot-bed may be placed on top of the ground or in an excavation. Whichever plan is decided upon, the site chosen should drain so as not to permit water to stand. If the below plan is adopted, the soil should be taken out to the depth of about 18 inches and for about three feet wider than the frame, so there may be room for banking up outside the frame. The banking is very important as it conserves the heat. Horse manure is the best. It should be turned once or twice, and should be quite hot and ready for use in five or six days.

To support the glass sash, a simple frame should be made of two-inch planks. It should be so constructed that it may be raised if the plants get too close to the glass. To provide for the shedding of rain, the back of the frame should be six inches higher than the front.

When building the bed the manure should be shaken so that the long and short particles are well mixed. Tramp well as each layer is added, until a depth of two or two and a half feet is secured. The frame is then put in position and five or six inches more manure is shaken in. Good garden soil to the depth of six inches should now be placed over the manure, and the sash put on. Five or six days the hot-bed will be ready for seed. A thermometer should be used and the temperature of the soil should not exceed 80 degrees. The seeding should be done in rows about four inches apart as it would in the open ground later in the season.

More complete instructions for handling the cold frame and the plants themselves are contained in Exhibition Circular No. 16, obtainable from the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

REASONS FOR OPTIMISM.

Future Looks Brighter for the People of England.

Although 1922 was, generally speaking, a year of severe trade depression in Great Britain, many signs warranting optimism appeared on the horizon during the closing months, says the American Chamber of Commerce in London in its official summary of business and economic conditions in the British Isles. The review asserts that exports of British goods were higher by £12,000,000 than in 1921, and that their value is still increasing. It is apparent, the summary says, that the adverse balance sheet has been reduced by more than £100,000,000.

Coal exports in 1922 nearly trebled in quantity and nearly doubled in value, while exports of cotton goods showed a remarkable increase.

The output of coal was considerably higher and the production of pig iron and steel showed a considerable expansion; in the case of steel, the increase amounted to more than 60 per cent.

The report says that probably the biggest revival of the year was in the coal industry, and that its exports, owing to the American demand in the latter months, exceeded the pre-war average.

The close of 1922 found the Lancaster cotton industry still in a state of depression, although the export declared that conditions were not so bad as was generally reported. The exports of cotton goods to India in the last twelve months were considerably more than in 1923.

The cost of living as registered by the Ministry of Labor shows no change. The index figures on December 31st, as on November 1, stood at 80, whereas it was 99 on December 1, 1921. Wholesale prices showed a slight increase during December.

Chocolate Boxes.

Even those persons of encyclopaedic knowledge occasionally to be met with would probably be puzzled if they were asked when chocolate sweets were first put into fancy decorated boxes. The much-regretted death of Mr. George Cadbury is a reminder of the fact, recalled now by few only, that it was the Bournville firm, in days prior to the building of that pioneer garden city, which first made the innovation. To the late Mr. Richard Cadbury, brother of the gentleman who has just passed away, is due the original idea, which he put into effect as far back as 1866. Mr. Richard Cadbury was an amateur artist of much taste, and from his studies were derived the pictures that appear on many of the earliest boxes to be thus adorned. He liked painting pretty children amid pleasant surroundings, and he also loved Swiss landscapes and mountain flowers, and these were the influences that prevail in these earliest decorations. Many of these first boxes and their color prints have been preserved by the firm, and have on occasions been shown at exhibitions.

Hughes and Native Cigars.

The suggestion that British smokers should be introduced to Australian tobacco reminds me of a story about Mr. Hughes, the present Australian Premier. He was once engaged in an argument with the late Sir George Reid, who said that he thought it unfair that the customs duties should punish smokers for their better taste in preferring foreign cigars to those made of home-grown tobacco.

Mr. Hughes was up in arms at once. "I have an Australian cigar in my pocket now," he said.

"Exactly!" retorted Sir George. "If it had been a Havana you would have smoked it long ago!"

LESSON FOR MARCH 11

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE

LESSON TEXT—Luke 22:39-48, 54.

GOLDEN TEXT—Christ also hath once suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God.—I Peter 3:18.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Matt 4:1-11; 26:22-46; I Cor 10:13, Heb. 4:15, 16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—An Angel Helps Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Prays for Strength.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Stand the Hardest Test.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Submission to the Father's Will.

I. Jesus at the Mount of Olives (v. 39). He went from the upper room under cover of night to the garden of Gethsemane. Gethsemane means oil press. It is a place where the oil was crushed out of the olives. There is a striking significance in Jesus' coming to this place. Olive oil was precious, being used both for food and lighting. The bruising and crushing of Christ in this garden has yielded the largest blessings in the world. It has provided food for men's souls and light for their lives.

II. His Companions (vv. 39, 40). Peter, James and John, who had been with Him on the Mount of Transfiguration, were permitted to go with Him into the deep shadows of the garden. He took those who were best able to apprehend the meaning of the tragic hour to be His sympathizing companions. This was needed to prepare them as His witnesses. Then, too, as a human being He craved sympathy.

Jesus Praying (vv. 41-44).

1. He Withdrew From the Disciples (v. 41). Even these disciples of the "inner circle" could not go with him. He tore himself away from them for He must be alone in this darkest hour. He kneeled down and prayed.

2. What He Said (vv. 42-44). "If thou be willing remove this cup from me." The cup did not mean the physical sufferings of the cross, though they were very great. He did not now desire to escape from the cross and thus stop short of His redemptive work, for this was the supreme purpose of His coming into the world (Heb. 2:14). It was rather the revelation to Him by the cross which loomed before Him, of His identification with sin in becoming the world's Redeemer. By virtue of the holiness and perfection of His nature, He could do nothing else than shrink from it. He saw in this bearing of the sins of the world the turning away of His Father's face. Knowing what was before Him, He came to Gethsemane for this hour, and in it He consciously brought his human will into accord with the divine will. Though the cup was bitter he bowed in submission to the Father's will. So great was this agony that His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. In this crucial hour an angel from heaven strengthened him.

IV. The Disciples Sleeping (vv. 45, 46). They had boasted of their fidelity, but could not watch with Him for an hour. He had issued a word of warning to them, but they were so benumbed with sorrow that they failed. He gently rebuked them, and commanded that they rise and pray lest they enter into temptation.

V. Jesus Betrayed (vv. 47, 48).

1. The Betrayal (v. 47). This was done by Judas, one of the twelve. He had enjoyed the most intimate relations with the Lord, eating with Him, listening to His teaching, witnessing His marvelous miracles and enjoying His confidence.

2. The Sign of Betrayal (v. 47). It was the kiss, the token of the most tender affection and friendship. He now degrades it by making it the token of disloyalty and treason. Jesus' words to this infamous disciple shows the infinite tenderness of His heart. If Judas had been at all human this pathetic appeal would have smitten him to the very heart. How many professing disciples have proven their disloyalty to the Master and even betrayed Him. All who bear the name, Christian, and especially ministers and teachers who deny the virgin birth, Deity and vicarious atonement of Christ are following in the footsteps of Judas. May each one inquire, "Lord, is it I?"

VI. Jesus Arrested (v. 54).

The multitude around with swords and clubs led by Judas invaded the sacred precincts of the garden and arrested Jesus and brought Him before the high priest.

There Might Be.

"And there are other specialists who will provide you with a family tree you can flaunt in anybody's face."

"Well! Well! Do you suppose there are filling stations where blue blood is pumped into plebeian veins?"

"Can I interest you in automobile insurance?"

"I haven't an automobile on my place."

"Well-er-what of that? You have burglar insurance, I presume, and yet you have no burglar on your premises."

Shakespeare Folios.

A nod from Frank Sabin, which meant a bid of £5,900 secured a first folio Shakespeare at Sotheby's auction rooms, London. The bidding was spirited. A big effort was made to win the first folio for the United States. A representative of a New York firm carried the bidding to $20,250 before giving way to the London experts. Then followed a duel between Mr. Quaritch and Mr. Sabin which ended in victory for the latter. The copy was from the collection of the late Richard Johnson, Manchester. Last May the famous Daniel copy of the first folio, which was in the Burdett-Coutts library, was sold for £8,500, about $38,700, and later went to the United States.—London Mail.

A Doll's House.

A doll's house that would stir the most blasé "poor little rich girl" is being exhibited in England, where it has captured the public fancy, says A. A. Hopkins, in the Mentor Magazine. Under the direction of Sir Neville Wilkinson, soldier and artist, a fairy palace covering fifty square feet, on the scale of one inch to a foot, has been built. It contains a chapel, a throne room, a king's study and a queen's boudoir, in addition to other rooms. The best artists of England decorated it. All of the furnishings, even to the dishes, are replicas in minature of the most exquisite originals. The doll's house is being exhibited for charity.

INDIANS OF THE PLAINS

THEIR HABITS AND MODE OF LIFE IN EARLY DAYS.

The Redmen Were Wanderers and Had No Fixed Place of Abode—When the Weather Was Hot, the Males Went About Naked and the Women Did Not Have a Great Amount of Clothing Either.

In the early days in the Saskatchewan country prairie Indians had no fixed abode; they lived by the chase and pursued the buffalo wherever they roamed. Often they spent the winter on the bleak prairies, and the only artificial means of keeping themselves warm was by collecting the dried bones of the slain buffalo that were plentiful in those days and using them as fuel.

Grease in those far-away days was plentiful among the Indians, and they used to get a bleached buffalo head and fill the holes where the eyes, ears and horns had been with hard fat taken from the recently slaughtered buffalo. Having placed the skull in the center of the tent, they set fire to it, and as the bone became hot it absorbed the grease and so kept burning for hours, giving out both light and heat.

In those early days the Indians, men and women, used to dress themselves in leather garments which they made from the hides of the buffalo. They removed the hair by a process of scraping and toned down the hide in a similar way, and then, by a process of washing and wringing, the skin was made pliable. If needed for wearing apparel, it was tanned by smoking. The skin was folded up and sewn into a sort of bag; this bag was suspended bottom upwards to a horizontal pole high enough to allow the mouth of the bag to touch the ground slightly. Then very dry bark or decayed wood, which they gathered from the forests and which was generally kept in stock and carried about by the Indians wherever they went, was placed under the bag and set fire to, and the bag was then pinned to the ground to keep in the smoke. This touchwood, or tinder, would smoulder away, giving forth a quantity of smoke, and after a short time the smoke could be seen percolating through the pore of the leather. This was kept up until the whole of the leather was thoroughly tanned by the smoke. The object of the treatment was to prevent the leather from becoming hard and unwearable after having been made wet by either perspiration or rain. Without this tanning the leather would dry hard and shrivel up, and it would be impossible to use the garment again; but, having been smoked, the leather could be dried and with a little rubbing the garment would then be as soft and pliable as the day it was first made.

In the summer time the Indians used very little clothing. The men might wear a pair of leather leggings, which would reach half way up their thigh and which were kept in place by a string of leather tied to another piece fastened round their waist as a sort of belt.

The only other garment worn was a breechcloth, made either of leather or a piece of blanket about a foot wide. This was placed between their legs, and the ends were passed under the belt fore and aft, to use a nautical phrase, the ends being long enough to hang down about a foot in order to keep the cloth in its place. Frequently, however, the men dispensed with their leggings and were considered fully dressed if they wore a breechcloth only.

The women clothed themselves with a sort of skirt made either from the same leather or of blue cloth purchased from the traders. The garment resembled a wide sack. A deep hem was made at one end, through which was passed a string of leather to tie around the waist. The skirt was usually short and seldom reached below the knee.

In making themselves bodices they took a piece of one or other of the materials mentioned, about two feet wide and four feet long, and cut a hole in the center through which they placed their heads. Having put on the garb in this fashion, an assistant was needed to make the costume complete. This was done by gathering the sides together and putting a few stitches under each of the arms to keep it from flapping about, and a few stitches here and there joined the jacket to the skirt. Sewing garments on the backs of women and children was neither uncommon nor inconvenient, because they were seldom changed until they were worn out. Then in many cases the old garment was not removed, but put out of sight by putting a new one on top. During a visit from a doctor to certain Indians in the Saskatchewan for the purpose of vaccinating them, one of his assistants made a remark about the thickness of some of their skins and how difficult it was to find blood. He was, however, encouraged to persevere and not be surprised if he came upon a lost shirt before he drew blood.

The dresses worn by the Indians in winter differed only in this respect: in addition to their summer garb, they enveloped themselves either in a blanket or more frequently with a buffalo robe. These robes were made by the Indian women, and were more difficult to make than leather, as all the work required to soften the skin had to be done on one side.

Their tents were also made of the skins of the buffalo, made first into leather and then cut and stitched together so as to make an evenly shaped "tepee." Women who knew how to cut and shape a tent well in this way were considered among the cleverest of their tribe.

Nothing to Stop It."

She: "I don't think so; there's nothing to stop it."

Bagasse.

Bagasse is the residue of the sugar cane after the cane has been crushed and the sugar-containing juice has been squeezed out of it. In a mill in Louisiana bagasse is now treated with chemicals, pulped and then rolled into boards that, when dry, make a very acceptable substitute for lumber.

CHINESE PIRATES.

Experiences of Passengers on Liner Bound for Hong Kong.

"It is a glorious thing to be a pirate king." So sang Gilbert and Sullivan. But how much more glorious it must be to be a pirate queen — and to wear pink silk trousers, a sky blue jacket and a belt of leather, with gold embroidery, and two automatic pistols. Such was the costume and armament of the Chinese lady who headed the pirates who, on November 20, 1922, seized and sacked the Sui An, between Macao and Hong Kong. This ship, which is a regular coastal liner, left Macao at 5 p.m. on the 20th, bound for Hong Kong, where she was due to arrive at nine p.m. About six p.m. the passengers were startled by the sound of firing and were terrified when armed Chinamen rushed forward and demanded money or life.

The pirates quietly killed an Indian guard, of whom there were four on board—shot the captain, and, seeing that he did not fall, knocked him on the head with the butt of a revolver. Then, thinking he was done for, they were for throwing him overboard, when one of the woman pirates, there were several, suggested that his wife might like to bury him, and so they desisted. He lay unconscious on the bridge all night.

A passenger, a Mr. Hawthorne, seized one of the pirates, of whom there were sixty-five, and nearly had him overboard when another pirate hit on the back and in both legs, so that he fell down. Later on they dragged him into the lounge and stole his money, his watch, his overcoat and his shoes. Meanwhile, there was a mad search for the purser, who had the keys of the safe. But he, prudent man, had thrown his cap and uniform coat overboard, so they did not succeed in finding him. It was deemed prudent, however, to deliver up the keys of the safe, which were handed to a passenger and by him placed in the purser's desk, from which they abstracted some $4,000 in cash. They expected more, but by chance the money had not been shipped.

By this time the passengers were in a state of panic and were driven into cabins and corners. A female pirate was particularly active — she fired two shots at the purser, which he returned and wounded her in the shoulder, so her day's work was done. In the mad stampede for safety tables and chairs were overturned, crockery in the saloon broken, and windows smashed by revolver shots. The ship looked like a shambles, blood on the decks and general disorder everywhere.

Throughout the night the pirates kept the passengers locked up, firing occasional shots through the doors of the cabins, and when the passengers refused to open them, breaking them open and robbing all those inside of their belongings. They succeeded in collecting $17,000 of property from the passengers, who were searched eight times during the night, passing in single file. The women were subjected to many indignities.

Some people have a strong sense of humor, which is a saving grace in times of trial. One lady thought the whole affair was a huge joke until they paid her and her mother a visit. They compelled her to take off her nice new coat, likewise her shoes, and give up her jewellery and money. With revolvers pointed at her, they asked her how much money she had left. She said, "None," when they kindly returned her $4. Having thoroughly searched the passengers, they started to examine the baggage. One pirate hauled a pair of Wellington boots out of a trunk. Trying one of them on and finding it came up to his knees, he shrieked with laughter and threw them away.

A good deal of loot was obtained from the passengers by bluffing. A successful ruse employed by the pirates was to tax the passengers with having concealed their jewellery. "I have seen you wearing a gold wrist-watch. Where is it now? Out with it, or I'll shoot you dead!" Many succumbed to this trick. One passenger had $130 hidden under a chair. He was bluffed into producing it. Some passengers managed to conceal their valuables. One had a valuable diamond pin. He hid it between his shirt and his tie and got by with it. Ladies concealed their jewelry in their stockings and clothing. One lady was not so fortunate. She was robbed of a wedding ring she had worn for sixteen years. On telling the pirate she could not get it off, the pirate threatened to blow her finger off. She then had no difficulty in getting it off. Some added insult to injury. A pirate went up to a passenger and asked for the loan of his hat. Putting it on and finding it was too small, he used it for a football.

While all this was going on, half a gale was blowing, and, as the pirates could not steer, and did not know where the ship was, an officer who was a passenger was forced to take the wheel. In the meantime, all ship's lights had been extinguished. This officer found the ship was off the island of Tsang Chau, a small island to the north of Bias Bay. He steered for Cheung Chan as ordered. When the ship arrived in the neighborhood, fires were seen to be burning on the hills. The pirates made a signal, and some fourteen or fifteen junks came alongside and took the pirates and their loot off. The total "swag" is estimated at $50,000.

When the ship reached Waglan lighthouse, a distress signal was run up and a little later Hong Kong was reached by wireless. A launch and a gunboat were soon alongside with a doctor and police. Among the passengers were a number of the members of an Italian opera company. They had a taste of real drama. They were robbed of nearly all they had but one of them had an exquisite watch which had been presented to him in 1916 at Manilla. He explained the fact to Mr. Pirates and they graciously let him keep it.

The Bucket Slipped.

In London a case arising out of a neighbors' quarrel. The prosecutrix had a wound in her head caused by a bucket thrown by the defendant.

"What have you to say?" asked the magistrate.

"It was an accident," said the defendant.

"How did it happen?"

"Well, sir, I was called out of my name, and I had a bucket of water ready for her. I intended her to have the water, but not the bucket. It slipped."

Canada Adopts Scottish Game

The history of the game of curling is not to be written from the beginning; its origin is lost in the mists of antiquity. It seems certain, however, that, as played when we first hear of it, it was extremely rudimentary, having developed by gradual stages to its present high state of scientific perfection. In a museum in Stirling are to be seen some very interesting old kuting (anglice, quoiting stones), and it is conjectured that the game as originally played, partook of the natures both of the quoits and curling. These old "loofies," as they were also called, were merely water-worn boulders, in which were bored holes for the finger and thumb, just as is done with the balls in a modern bowling alley. It is supposed that the players were accustomed to hurling them, rather than sliding them; the game was probably a combination of the two methods.

At an early date—in sixteen hundred and something — a great and revolutionary invention was made by a genius now unknown. This was the principle of affixing a handle to the stone. A wonderful improvement, indeed, although the handles were merely pieces of bent iron and the stones were not cut to any shape, remaining as nature fashioned them; and they sometimes ran up to a hundred and twenty pounds in weight. Naturally, no two of them were alike, and, having distinct individualities of their own, they frequently received appropriate names from their proud possessors, as the Deuk, the Gander, the Whaup, the Cockit Hat, the Bannock, and so on. Even curlers of the present day claim that their own particular stones are unique, though the unprejudiced observer sees no more difference between them and others than so many peas in a pod.

Handled curling stones were later fashioned into many different shapes, until about the beginning of the last century, when the game was brought under some sort of regulation, and it was decided that the shape of all "stanes" must be circular.

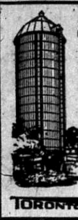

It is a curious thing that in Canada two entirely different kinds of stones are used in different parts of the country. In the Maritime Provinces, Western Ontario, and the West, stones are used, but in Eastern Ontario and in the Province of Quebec they use iron "stones," or "metals," as they are generally called. These are heavier than the regular "stanes," but they are smaller in size, and for that reason are considered by many players to make possible a more scientific game. Finer draws can be made, and narrower ports negotiated.

Sweeping is the whole fascination of curling—a fascination which holdeth old men from the chimney corner and makes a staid Presbyterian minister roar like a lion baulked of his prey. Bowling on the green is simply summer curling, but any Scot will tell you that it is without salt or savour—simply because the element of sweeping is absent. When the bowler plays his shot, he is finished; there is nothing more that he can do, either to make or mar. But curlers, when the stone has left the player's hand, do not stand there dangling bonnet and plume, or broom. The skip issues his commands, he shouts them down the length of the rink; his outcries resound to the lofty girders of the huge buildings. The sweepers bend to their task, cringing beneath the lash of the skip's tongue; the player adds his efforts to theirs, running down the ice after his "stane" and talking to it in strange, soothing, Scottish terms. Will it reach the hog? Is it to live or die? Over the line the sweepers coax it; inch by inch, foot by foot, slowly forward travels the insensate stone, its path made smoother for it than ever was that of man or woman. "Into the house!" screams the skip, forgetting, in his excitement, his Scots accent. One more effort, brave stone; just a wee bit distance noo. "A bite! A bite!" cries the player with his last glad breath: the skip's broom is cast into the air; the sweepers, in the zero atmosphere, mop their streaming brows; for a moment ecstasy reigns in their heaving breasts.

Curling and golf are indeed thoroughly Scottish institutions, rooted in the soil, mixed up with them, sometimes, perhaps, coming into conflict with them is another great Scottish tradition—the strict observance of the Lord's Day. I do not know whether Scots are really more particular in this respect than the rest of the English-speaking world, but I have often thought what a frightful bore it must be for a Scotsman to have to go through life—generally a very long life—listening to worm-eaten, old chestnuts about "whustlin' on the Sawbath." It is one of the penalties of a glorious ancestry and origin. Sunday curling has rarely been practiced even in England, let alone in Scotland or Canada. Probably one reason is that ministers have always been the keenest of curlers. "Frae Maidenhead tae Johnny Groat's nae curlers like the clergy" is an old Scottish proverb. Many will remember the minister in one of Ian Maclaren's stories who so far forgot himself one Saturday, in the midst of a black frost, as to regret that the morrow would be the Sabbath.

There was a minister of Kyle once, the story goes, who curled six days in the week, neglecting the duty of preparing his Sunday sermon. On Saturday he made an effort; he locked himself into his house, the better to resist temptation, and began upon his task. But the curlers came by his house, waving their brooms at him and urging him to come with them. "But I have my sermon to write for to-morrow," said he. "Gie's an auld ane," sai dthey, and gie them an auld ane he did, causing a scandal which has lasted to this day.

PICTURESQUE SCIENCE.

Toronto Professor Seeks That Feature In His Work.

That a great scientist need not be cold, impractical or aloof is proved by the case of John C. McLennan, Professor of Physics at the University of Toronto, who has just added further laurels to his reputation by liquefying helium. Prof. McLennan is none of these things. All his acquaintances know his geniality; his friendly qualities, while his practical ability has been demonstrated over many years, culminating in important war service and research work. The great Physics Building of the University is a monument to his constructive capacity as a teacher and leader in education.

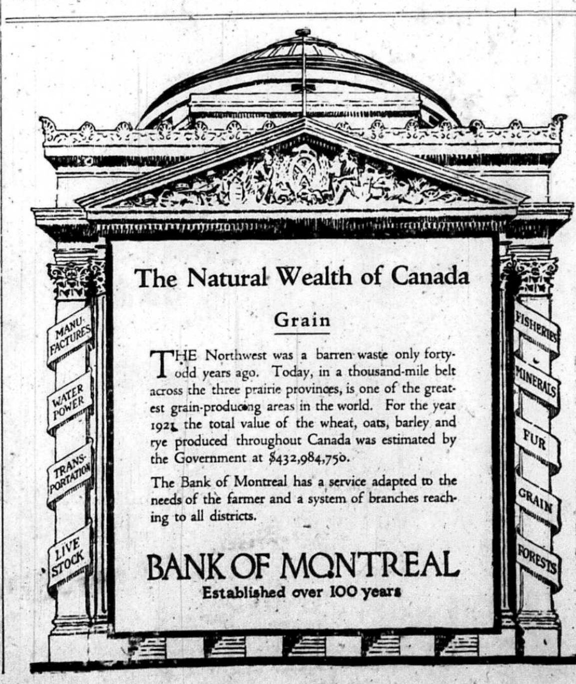

Applying his scientific mind and practical ability to the problems of the war, during the last two years of which he was Scientific Adviser to the British Admiralty, Prof. McLennan brought helium gas into use for war balloons. Its value was of the highest importance, because it is not inflammable, while hydrogen, the gas ordinarily used, is highly inflammable and dangerous from friction as well as from flame.

Helium was found in a supply of natural gas at Bow Island, Alta., to the extent of 0.36 per cent.

"This is a comparatively small and apparently insignificant amount," Prof. McLennan told Parliament in 1919, "and yet I may tell you that this wonderful gas was so rare and costly that, at pre-war prices, the supply of it which escaped into the air from the furnaces and stoves of Calgary, and other houses on the pipe line, was $50,000,000 per day. By the developments which have taken place during the past two years, the cost of producing the gas in a pure state has been reduced, roughly, 100,000 times."

Now helium has been liquefied and it remains for the research to be carried to a point of practical commercial use. It is work of a thorough-going Canadian, who not only understands the necessity of science for the development of Canada's varied resources, but is doing something practical toward that end.

Prof. McLennan was born at Ingersoll, Ont., in 1867, his father being a grain dealer. His early education was secured at Clinton and at Stratford, and it is said that the prevailing tendencies in the latter city almost led him to become a railroadman. He pursued his studies at the Universities of Toronto and Cambridge, and since 1892 has been connected with the former, rising from the position of Assistant Demonstrator in Physics. He has the gift vouchsafed to few men of making a scientific subject not only clear, but interesting, to the lay mind. A series of lectures by him on the metric system some years ago, at the request of the Dominion Government, is still remembered for the fascination with which audiences all over the country heard the explanation of this dry subject.

MISS STODDARD'S NEW HAT.

Cora Francis Stoddard, Executive Secretary of the Scientific Temperance Federation of the United States, has a new hat, and thereby hangs a story.

Before Prohibition went into effect, there were more than 300 Keeley cures. Real Institutes, Oppenheimer and other cures doing a lucrative commercial business in treating victims of drink. There were also a number of concerns of this sort conducted on a philanthropic basis.

Since Jan. 1st, "Pussyfoot" Johnson has been seeking to ascertain if a single one, of these remained. He was unable to find one. Two months ago he requested Miss Stoddard to make a search also, promising her a new hat if she succeeded in finding one. After two months of effort, Miss Stoddard discovered a single Keeley Institute remaining. She promptly claimed her hat and got it.

But the interesting part of this story is that three years of Prohibition has resulted in wiping out the whole business of curing drinks from American life. These 300 and more Jag Cures have been closed for the sole reason that this short period of Prohibition has so reduced the supply of drink victims the "Jag cures" are no longer profitable.

But listen to this: While these concerns have disappeared from American life, they are being put up all over Europe, where there is no prohibition and drink cures are needed.

Man of Letters Thanks Tanlac

Canadian Writer Declares He Never Saw its Equal For Building One Up.

"Tanlac is a faithful old friend that never fails me," declared James A. Brain, 674 Gerrard St., E., Toronto, Ont., recently. Mr. Brain is one of Toronto's best known citizens, and in addition to being a successful business man, he has written many poems and songs that have gained wide popularity.

"I've been taking an occasional treatment of Tanlac for four years, and it keeps me in fine condition. Why, right now, I feel like I could hold ground in a foot race with any man my age in Canada.

"Before taking Tanlac, I was all run-down, had little appetite, and was suffering from indigestion. I wasn't sleeping well and was often so weak and nervous I couldn't attend to business.

"Well, sir, all these ailments disappeared within my first treatment of Tanlac, and to this good day I've been eating, sleeping and feeling fine. In all my seventy years, I've never seen the equal of Tanlac, and I just wouldn't be without it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35-million bottles sold.

CANADIAN BACON INCREASING IN FAVOR

We have the assurance of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, of the Dominion, Dr. J. H. Grisdale, that during his recent visit to Great Britain, he found commission men, dealers, prominent citizens and consumers generally, actuated by a wonderful warm feeling towards Canada, her people, and her products. On top of this comes a message directed from London that leading Importers of Danish bacon have notified the consignees that the Danish bacon reaching Britain at the present time is much too fat, while the Canadian bacon that reaches London is of good quality. The message adds that Canadian press representatives overseas have been informed that Denmark is in danger of losing her favorable position in th trade unless change for the better is effected. Formerly there was a wide margin between price paid for Danish and Canadian bacon, but recent advices received by the Live Stock Branch at Ottawa indicate that there has been quite a levelling up, that in fact the price paid for Canadian lean bacon per long hundredweight is but a few shillings less than that paid for the best Danish.

Ex-Kaiser Sentimental.

LONDON, March 5.—A special correspondent of the Daily Chronicle writes:

"A family event, I learn, is expected to take place in a few months' time at Doorne House, the ex-kaiser's place of exile in Holland. The ex-kaiser is particularly anxious that the first-born on his second marriage should not see the light of day 'in exile.' In order to avoid this negotiations have been going on for some time to enable the ex-kaiser to enter into possession again of his villa in Corfu. If the negotiations are successful he hope that the coming scion of the House of Hohenzollern may be born on that island.

"The ex-kaiser knows it is too much to expect permission to go with his consort to Corfu, but he hopes the princess may be permitted to go there some time before the birth of the child."

KILLED BY MOONSHINE

Dead Man's Friend Now Faces Serious Charge.

William Belore May Be Held Responsible for the Fact That Cyranus Marr Died From the Effects of Poisonous Liquor—Arrest Was Unexpected and Prisoner Says That He Did Not Supply Drink.

ST. THOMAS, March 5.—The arrest of William Belore of Fingal late Friday night, and his arraignment before Magistrate Maxwell Saturday on the charge of having caused the death of Cyranus Marr of Iona on the night of January 20 by giving him an alcoholic poison, proved an unexpected development in the Fingal "moonshine" tragedy which has created so much interest during the past four or five weeks.

Belore was one of Marr's companions on the night of the fatality, and swore at the inquest that the liquor had been purchased by Marr from a young man just outside of London about a fortnight prior to the fatal drinking spree.

Early last week Albert Ward of Toronto, a special investigator for the Ontario License Commission, arrived in the district; and Belore's arrest is the result. The information against Belore was sworn out by Ward.

The doctors who performed the autopsy found traces of fusel oil in Marr's stomach, and in their report explained that death had evidently been caused by drinking improperly cured whiskey. Belore appeared in the County Police Court a few day's after Marr's death and paid a $15 fine and costs on conviction of being intoxicated in a public place, and about ten days ago he pleaded guilty to the charge of having liquor unlawfully in his possession, paying a $200 fine and costs.

At that hearing he repeated the statements made at the inquest—that Marr had met the bootlegger and bought the "moonshine" unknown to him. Three bottles had been procured, he claimed, and one consumed on the journey back to Fingal in Marr's automobile. Marr, he alleged, had become so intoxicated that he had run the car into a railing on a hill west of this city, and fearing that some person might come along and see the other two bottles, Belore stated that he had placed them in his pockets and had taken them home, giving them to Marr the night of the latter's death.

Belore described the liquor as being "white" looking, and possessed of "an awful kick." Belore was remanded to the county jail without bail until Wednesday afternoon, when the preliminary examination will take place. He seemed quite unconcerned about his position when arraigned in court.

Barred From Ontario Roads.

WINDSOR, Ont., March 5.—Chief of Police Thompson has been notified by the Provincial Highways Department that M. W. Mitchell, the Detroit man, whose automobile ran down and killed H. E. Keys, of Toronto, a highway employe, near Chatham, several weeks ago, has been barred from use of Ontario roads for two years.

Was Scalded to Death.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., March 5.—Margaret McMahon, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McMahon, of Erie avenue, died on Saturday as the result of being burned about the body. The child fell into a bath of hot water.

Fear Woman Was Drowned.

CHATHAM, Ont., March 5. — Miss Stonehouse, of Wallaceburg, the aged lady who disappeared from the Public General Hospital here on Thursday afternoon, is still missing and her relatives fear that she may have met with disaster.

All Saturday a party of men, under the direction of Alexander Garnt, were engaged in dragging the river at points where the ice-cutting operations had been carried on and at various air-holes, but the search was fruitless and the woman has not yet been found.

BUENOS AYRES, March 5.—Father Luis Perez was stabbed to death while conducting Mass early Sunday morning at Bahia Blanca. His assassin, a Dane, was arrested, but thus far has declined to discuss the crime.

WORKING FOR REUNION

David Lloyd George Speaks to British Liberals.

Sir John Simon Grows Sarcastic and Hints at Opportunism in His Reply to Former Coalition Premier—Hon. H. H. Asquith Will Speak on Proposal During Coming Week.

LONDON, March 5.—Replying to Lloyd George's appeal uttered in Edinburgh last week for a reunion of the Liberal forces, Sir John Simon, one of the leaders of the Independent Liberal party, in a speech at Cleckheaton, said Lloyd George, in dealing with the qualifications for political life, omitted the only one that really commanded public confidence, "the quality of speaking what you really believe, and of not changing your political destination with every wind that blows."

Continuing, he said that united action was really the preliminary to formal unity, and he complained of the attitude of the National Liberals in the House of Commons on several recent occasions. Fighting Liberals, said Simon, would welcome with all their hearts every newcomer who would fight alongside them for the Liberal cause, but he believed Liberalism would become impotent if it took over the liabilities of the past four years which drove the last coalition into political bankruptcy.

The reply of H. H. Asquith, leader of the Independent Liberals, to Lloyd George's new movement for a reunion of the two Liberal forces will probably be forthcoming when he speaks at Cambridge on Wednesday.

The London Chronicle, Lloyd George's mouthpiece, expresses the hope that Mr. Asquith will be as plain and outspoken as was Lloyd George last week. He will not likely disagree with what Lloyd George said as to the need for rewelding a united Liberal party, says the Chronicle, and adds: "Unless the party cleavage is healed the party will perish. The new orientation of our politics with a strong Labor party on the left and a modernized Tory party on the right renders it as certain as tomorrow's sunrise. The Liberal rank and file are coming to realize this, and if the leaders were prevented from agreeing they would, we believe, strive hard to agree without them."

WAS LIKE WILD WEST.

Gun Play Startled the Citizens of North Bay.

NORTH BAY, March 5.—The calm of Main street was given a rude jolt when pedestrians were treated to a miniature gun battle—revolver shots and all on Friday afternoon. The occasion was an attempt by Chief of Police Morbey and Plainclothesman Fred Lefebre to arrest Gus Marsalino, who was suspected of having liquor in his new automobile.

Gus was spotted proceeding down Main street with two women and another Italian in the car and was ordered to stop by Lefebre, who took his position in the middle of the road, at the corner of Cassel and Main streets. Gus stepped on the gas and passed the constable only to be met at the corner of Klock and Main streets by the chief, who gave the halt signal again to no avail.

When Marsalino refused to stop four shots promptly were fired from the chief's revolver, three of them entering the left rear tire and the fourth puncturing the front tire.

Marsalino was found to have a bottle of liquor in the car and a charge was laid of having liquor in other than his private dwelling. Marsalino settled out of court for $200 with $27 costs.

Dog Saves Six Lives.

BELLEVILLE, March 5.—Barely escaping with their lives, the family of Thomas Kimmerly, living near Albury, Prince Edward county, sustained heavy losses Saturday, when their home was burned to the ground. They owe their lives to the alertness of their dog, which barked and growled and finally broke a pane of glass in its efforts to warn its master and his family of their peril.

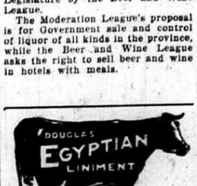

The origin of the fire is a mystery. It appears to have started in the east wing of the house, which was not used in the winter time. The family lived in the west side, and were able to escape by putting on the few clothes they could gather as they woke from sleep. Very little else was saved. Neighbors are looking after the family, comprising Mr. and Mrs. Kimmerly and four young children.

Liquor Plebiscite In Manitoba.

WINNIPEG, March 5.—Submission of both the petition of the Moderation League and the Beer and Wine League petition to the people early in June is under consideration by the Provincial Government.

The feeling is said to exist among Government members that it would not be proper to submit the petition presented by the Moderation League and ignore the one presented to the Legislature by the Beer and Wine League.

The Moderation League's proposal is for Government sale and control of liquor of all kinds in the province, while the Beer and Wine League asks the right to sell beer and wine in hotels with meals.

SEIZED THREE CITIES.

French Continue to Advance Into German Territory.

PARIS, March 5. — Three great German cities with nearly 1,000,000 inhabitants — Karlsruhe, Mannheim and Darmstadt are now as good as occupied by a French expeditionary force.

The Darmstadt railway center and the Karlsruhe and Mannheim ports were taken over Saturday, although the cities themselves had not been occupied.

Troops headed by armored automobiles and cavalry moved forward at dawn across the Rhine, meeting only a chilly, sleepy welcome. Not more than 1,000 soldiers were engaged for the occupation of each strategic point.

The occupation of the cities themselves, demanding the use of at least two divisions, can be only a matter of time. In order to fill the gap behind, as these troops are brought up, colored soldiers are likely to be moved in.

In some quarters it is asserted the new French advance has not got so much to do with turning the thumbscrew on Germany as with checkmating the reiterated refusal of Gen. Godley, British commander, at Cologne, to allow the French to use the main left bank Rhine railway through the British area.

It is stated that with the further move forward to Marburg it will be possible for the French to organize a direct railway system on the right bank of the Rhine from Essen to Strassbourg, via Frankfurt. But to do this it will be necessary to occupy Frankfurt.

It is reported here French and Belgian Governments have agreed on a settlement with Germany which would render the Versailles Treaty null and void, at least as far as France, Germany and Belgium are concerned.

If, as is unlikely, the occupation of Karlsruhe, Darmstadt and Mannheim should lead Chancellor Cuno to offer the olive branch when the Reichstag opens Tuesday, the French and Belgian Governments, acting jointly, will present their terms.

Premiers Theunis and Poincare drew up this plan last week after considerable differences in the French Cabinet. War Minister Maginot, backed by President Millerand, urged that the new treaty should be drawn up without regard for neutrals or former allies. The moderates won, however, and it is probable the offer, when it is made, will be indicated to all the Governments interested and will be found not altogether to ignore their interests.

"DRY" WORKER ARRESTED.

He Must Face Theft Charge In Windsor.

LONDON, Ont., March 5.—Charged with the misappropriation of $3,000 of the funds of the Essex Provision Co. of Windsor, now defunct, Hughson Johnston, of South London, employed by London Motors, Limited, as a stock salesman, was placed under arrest by the local police Friday night, and was taken back to Windsor to stand trial. Provincial Officer Moran had charge of the prisoner.

Johnston's wife was asphyxiated by illuminating gas at her home on Elmwood avenue here two weeks ago, leaving a family of eight children. He is a former resident of Windsor, where for a time he worked with Rev. J. O. L. Spracklin as a prohibition officer. He had taken a prominent part in prohibition matters in the Border City, and was one of the committee which brought the famous "Pussyfoot" Johnston to lecture there. Before his arrest Johnston told a reporter here that he did not know why the Windsor warrant had been issued, but that he had determined to go at once to that city and have the matter cleared up.

The complaint against Johnston was made by J. E. Stone, License Inspector for South Essex, who alleges that the dry leader failed to deliver stock of the Essex Provision Co. for which he had paid him $3,000. Stone, in the warrant, charges Johnston with converting the money to his own use.

Fails In Rescue Mission.

HALIFAX, N.S., March 5. — The Canadian Government steamer Stanley, which set out Wednesday to succor the disabled steamer Pro-Patrio, which smashed her propellers and became fast in the ice 80 miles from St. Pierre over a week ago, is still in the grip of an ice field off the Cape Breton coast and drifting away from her objective at the rate of a mile an hour.

The Pro-Patrio is thought to be in a serious predicament, having sent out distress calls by wireless a week ago, stating that the ship was short of water. The Pro-Patria sailed from Halifax for St. Pierre February 20th with ten passengers and a heavy mail cargo.

Bank Clerk Commits Suicide.

REGINA, Sask., March 5.—Max Edwards, 18-year-old ledgerkeeper of the Bank of Hamilton branch at Tuxford, Sask., ended his life late Friday night by shooting himself through the head. Although suicide is apparent, Dr. J. M. Hourigan, coroner, Moose Jaw, will examine the circumstances to decide whether an inquest will be necessary. Mr. Jackson, the manager, was a loss to explain the motive as the youth's books were in perfect order.

Burned by Explosion In Furnace.

PETROLIA, Ont., March 5.—Mrs. Heaver, caretaker of the Methodist church, was attending to the furnace in the basement, in which a new burner had just been installed. She lighted it, went away, and on returning found the gas out and the whole room affected. After opening the windows and doors to allow the gas to escape she again lit the burner, when an explosion occurred, burning her severely about the face and hands.

Bullet Removed From Lung.

OSHAWA, Ont., March 5.—Hawley Byron, the local ticket clerk, who was found in his room at the Lake unconscious from two bullet wounds and now lies in the local hospital hovering between life and death, went under the X-ray and Dr. F. J. Rundle removed the bullet which pierced his lung and lodged in the muscles of his back. He is reported as resting more easily. If his condition warrants it he will again undergo the X-ray to-morrow to locate the bullet in his head. No couse as yet has been learned for the tragedy.

Ice on Lake Erie Moving.

BUFFALO, March 5.—Fishermen on both sides of Lake Erie were compelled to abandon their lines and make for shore in haste Sunday when an 84-mile-an-hour gale churned up the open water and started huge cracks in the shore ice.

Nine men marooned on the breakwater were brought to shore by the life-saving crew. They reported that all their companions on the United States side succeeded in reaching land.

At Crescent Beach, on the north shore of the lake, five fishing parties abandoned automobiles in which they had gone over the ice to the fishing grounds earlier in the day. The ice is not breaking up into floes, and it is believed the machines can be saved.

Treaty Ratified.

WASHINGTON, March 5. — The treaty between Canada and the United States to control halibut fishing in North Pacific waters was ratified by the United States Senate Saturday just before adjournment. It had been blocked temporarily by Senator Jones, Republican, Washington, but was approved Saturday with an amendment by Mr. Jones providing that its restrictions against Canadian halibut fishermen should apply to all other British nationals.

The treaty establishes a closed halibut season from November 16 to February 15 and creates a joint commission to regulate North Pacific halibut fishing.

Johnston, was elected by 14,824, to Col. Stanley's 9,648.

LADY LARKSPUR

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

Copyright by Charles Scribner's Sons

"They've been wonderful days. It really makes no difference about letters or your duties elsewhere. Where you go I shall certainly follow; that's something I should like to have understood here and now."

Loitering along the beach on our way home, I was guiltily conscious that I was making love rather ardently to a lady who had introduced herself to me as my uncle's widow. The sensation was, on the whole, very agreeable. . . .

"Mr. Torrence and Mr. Raynor," Antoine announced as we were leaving the dinner-table.

"Mr. Raynor?" asked Alice. "Who, pray, is Mr. Raynor?"

Their arrival together chilled me, a chill increased by Torrence's frosty greeting as he gripped my hand angrily and hissed in my ear:

"You've deceived me about this whole business! I suggest that you leave the room."

I was walking toward the door when Mrs. Farnsworth protested.

"You are not going? Alice, there is no reason why Mr. Singleton should leave us."

"Of course he is not going," said Alice. She was established at ease in a wicker rocker, unconcernedly plying the crochet-hook in her fan.

"There may be matters—" began Torrence.

"Oh, nothing that Bob can't hear!" Alice declared.

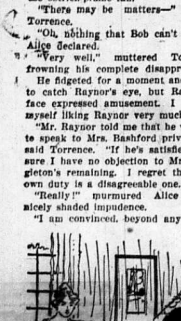

"Very well," muttered Torrence frowning his complete disapproval.

He fidgeted for a moment and tried to catch Raynor's eye, but Raynor's face expressed amusement. I found myself liking Raynor very much.

"Mr. Raynor told me that he wished to speak to Mrs. Bashford, privately," said Torrence. "If he's satisfied, I'm sure I have no objection to Mr. Singleton's remaining. I regret that my own duty is a disagreeable one."

"Really!" murmured Alice with nicely shaded impudence.

"I am convinced, beyond any question," said Torrence sharply, "that you are not the widow of the late Raymond B. Bashford."

"Really!" Murmured Alice.

"That statement," said Alice without ceasing the languid flutter of the fan, "is correct—quite correct."

"Certainly. It is entirely true," affirmed Mrs. Farnsworth.

"And you coming here as you did is, if you will pardon my frankness, susceptible of very disagreeable constructions. It is my painful duty——"

He choked upon his duty until Raynor spoke, smiling broadly. . . .

"I find my duty really a privilege," he said. "Not only are you not Mrs. Bashford," he went on with the utmost good humor, "but you are a very different person. I should explain that I represent the American state department, and that our government has been asked by the British embassy to find you and deliver a certain message to you."

"Oh, papa wants me to come home!" cried Alice. "It's droll, Constance, that papa should have thought of making an affair of state of us. Dear papa will always indulge me just so far, and then he becomes alarmed."

"He's certainly alarmed now!" laughed Raynor. "But the ambassador has warned us to be most tactful and circumspect. You may not know that Sir Arnold Seabring is on his way to this country on a confidential mission. That, of course, is not for publication."

"Sir Arnold Seabring?" gasped Torrence.

"The father of the Honorable Miss Seabring," replied Raynor with an elucidating nod toward Alice.

"But how——" I began.

"Mrs. Bashford, the widow of your uncle, is the Honorable Miss Seabring's aunt. Is that quite correct?"

"It is all true," said Alice. "I am a fraud, an impostor. You might go on and say that Mrs. Farnsworth is the wife of Sir Cecil Arrowsmith. But all the guilt is mine. It was my idea to come here and play a little, because I knew Aunt Alice wouldn't mind. She knew just what I meant to do; really she did, Mr. Torrence! In fact, I have her written permission to use the house; which I should have shown you if we had got in a pinch. But it seemed so much more fun just to let matters take their course. It's a pet theory of mine that life is a dull affair unless we trust to luck a little. After my brother's death I was very unhappy and had gone out East to visit Aunt Alice, who is a great roamer. I thought it would be nice to stop here on the way home, just for a lark, without telling papa, who was frantically cabling me to hurry back to England. This isn't the first time I've played hide-and-seek with my family. I was always doing that as a child, and if it hadn't been for my general waywardness I should never have known you, Constance. Why, I shouldn't have known you, gentlemen! It has all been so delightful!"

This naive confession amused Raynor greatly, but Torrence was seeing nothing in it but a dangerous escapade.

"In the name of the Bainbridge Trust company, I must notify you," he began, "that by representing yourself as another person, entering into possession of a large property——"

"But we've been paying all our own expenses; we haven't taken any money from you," pleaded Alice.

"Of course you wouldn't do such a thing," affirmed Raynor. " My instructions are to give you any sum of money you ask. In fact, the government of the United States is instructed to assume full responsibility for you until your father arrives."

"May I go on and clarify matters for these gentlemen, for Mr. Torrence at least is entitled to a full explanation?"

"Constance," said Alice, turning with a little shrug to her friend, "we have been caught! Our story is being spoiled for us. Please go on, Mr. Raynor. Just what does the American state department have to say about us?"

"That you are endowed with a very unusual personality," continued Raynor, his eyes twinkling. "You are not at all obsessed with the idea that station of life to which you were born; you like playing at being all sorts of other persons. Once, so your friend the ambassador confided to me, you ran away and followed a band of gypsies, which must have been when you were a very little girl."

"I was seven," said Alice, "and the gypsies were nice to me."

"And then you showed talent for the stage——"

"A dreadful revelation!" she exclaimed.

"But you don't know that it was really your father who managed to have Mrs. Farnsworth, one of the most distinguished actresses in England, take charge of you."

"No! Alice never knew that!" said Mrs. Farnsworth, laughing. "I was her chaperon as well as her governess, but Alice's father knew that if Alice found it out it would spoil the adventure for her. Alice must do things her own way."

"You are a fraud," said Alice, "but I always suspected you a little."

"Speaking of the stage," resumed Raynor, "it is also a part of my instructions that the Honorable Miss Seabring shall be discouraged from any further adventure in that direction; she's far too talented; there's danger of her becoming a great luminary. In other words, she is not to grace the boards again as Violet Dewing."

Alice's brow clouded, and she turned to me. "That was settled when you mailed that letter for me. It was to make an appointment with an American playwright who wants me to appear in a most adorable comedy."

"His name is Dick Searles," I said, "and he's my most intimate friend."

She professed indignation when I told of my eavesdropping in the woods, but when I explained that I knew all about the play and Searles' despairing search for her she was enormously pleased.

"How wonderful!" she exclaimed. "You know I told you, Constance, that if we really threw ourselves in the path of adventure mystery would come out to meet us in silken sandals."

"But you will not appear in this play?" asked Raynor anxiously. "It is the business of the government of the United States to see that you commit no further indiscretions. There is another matter which I hope you can clear up. You are not only a subject of concern to the British embassy, but the French ambassador also has appealed to us to assist him in a trifling matter!"

"The French ambassador?" Alice exclaimed with a surprise I knew to be unfeigned. "I thought the dear Montani was an Italian?"

"We will continue to call him Montani, but he's a Frenchman and one of the keenest men in the French secret service. You have caused him the deepest anguish."

"Please hurry on!" She bent forward with childish delight. "This is a part of the story we've been lying that I really know nothing about. I hope it won't be disappointing!"

Raynor laughed and shook his head.

"It's fortunate that Montani is a gentleman, anxious to shield and protect you. You have a fan in your hand——"

She spread it out for inspection.

"A harmless trinket, but without it the adventure would have been very tame."

"The story of the fan is in the most secret archives of Paris and Washington. When you were packing up in Tokyo to come home on the very last day before your departure a lady called on you whom you knew as Madame Volkoff."

"The dear woman!" exclaimed Mrs. Farnsworth. "We knew her very well."

"Almost too well," cried Raynor. "A cultivated woman and exceedingly clever, but a German spy. She had collected some most interesting data with reference to Japanese armament and defenses, but suspecting that she was being watched, she hit upon a most ingenious way of getting the information across the Pacific, expecting to communicate with German agents in America who could pick it up and pass it on, to Berlin. You see, she thought you an easy mark. She got hold of a man which Montani informs me is the exact counterpart of that one you hold. She reduced her data to the smallest possible compass, concealed it in her fan, and watched for a chance to exchange with you. The astute Montani found the Japanese artisan who had done the tinkering for her and surmised that you were to be made the unconscious bearer of the incriminating papers. Montani jumped for the steamer you were sailing on with every determination to get the fan. His professional pride was aroused, and it was only after he found it impossible to steal the fan that he asked our assistance. He's a good fellow, a gentleman in every sense, and with true French chivalry wanted to do the job without disturbing you in any way."

We pressed closer about Raynor as he took the fan, spread it open, and held it close against a table-lamp. "One, third, sixth and ninth," he counted. "You will notice that those three pieces of ivory are a trifle thicker and not as transparent as the others. Glancing at them casually in an ordinary light, you would never suspect that they had been hollowed out, an exceedingly delicate piece of work. It's a pity to spoil anything so pretty, but——"

He snapped the top of one of the panels, disclosing a neatly folded piece of thin paper.

"Antoine," I said, "tie the arms of the prisoner in the toolhouse and bring him here!"

"A, sare, in the toolhouse!" Montani, Torrence and Raynor ejaculated in concert.

"Oh, yes," murmured Alice, "that's the pleasantest chapter of all. Our grenadiers captured a whole invading army that made a night attack—one of the most remarkable engagements of the present war, Mr. Torrence."

"The battle of the Bell-Hops," I suggested. "The prisoner will be here in a moment."

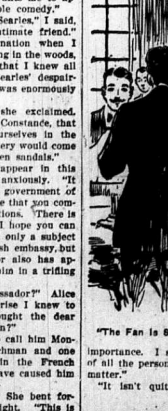

While we waited Montani produced a photograph, instantly recognizable as a likeness of our prisoner.

"My reputation is saved!" he excitedly claimed excitedly. "That he should have been caught here! It is too much! I shall never forgive myself for not warning you of the danger. But you understand, mesdames, that I was sincerely anxious to recover the fan without letting you know its importance. When I found at Seattle and Chicago that you were traveling under assumed names, I was—pray, pardon me—deeply puzzled, the more so because I had satisfied myself in Tokio that you were loyal Englishwomen, and I believed you to be innocent of complicity with Madame Volkoff. Why you should have changed your names, I didn't know, but it's not my affair now."

"We saw you on the steamer and again in the hotel at Chicago. It was very amusing to be followed. We gave you the slip, stopped at Buffalo to see Niagara, and you came on here and scared the servants to death! But you were generous at every point," said Alice. "We changed our names so we could amuse ourselves here—at Bob's expense. So now I ask everybody's forgiveness!"

The prisoner, arriving at this moment, became the center of interest. Without a word Montani walked up to him, brushed back his hair, and called our attention to a scar on the crown of his head.

"There can be no mistake. This is Adolph Schwenger, who passes as readily for a Frenchman as I do for an Italian. The capture is of great importance. I shall want the names of all the persons who assisted in the matter."

"It isn't quite clear to me," remarked Raynor, turning to me, "why you held that fellow and said nothing about it. If there had been a mistake, it would have been just a little embarrassing for you, Singleton."

"Chivalry!" Mrs. Farnsworth answered for me. "An anxious concern for the peace and dignity of two foolish women! I didn't know there was so much chivalry left in the world."

An hour was spent in explanations, and Raynor declared that I must write a full account of the Allied army in Connecticut and the capture of the spy. The state archives contained nothing that touched this episode for piquancy, he declared; and even the bewildered Torrence finally saw the joke of the thing and became quite human.

Raynor and Montani decided after a conference that the German agent should be taken to New York immediately, and I called Flynn to drive them down.

"It's most fortunate, sir, that you sent for him when you did!" announced Antoine, nearly bursting with importance. "The boys had heard queer sounds in the night, but could find nothing wrong. The prisoner had taken up the flooring at the back of the tool-house, and was scooping up the dirt. He'd got a place pretty near big enough to let him through. I suppose we ought to have noticed it, sir."

It was just as Raynor and Montani were leaving the house with the prisoner that we heard a commotion in the direction of the gates. I took the word that no one was to be admitted to the grounds, but as I ran out the front door a machine was speeding madly toward the house. A dozen of the guards were yelling their protests at the invasion, and a spurt of fire preceded the booming of Zimmerman's shotgun.

"Get your man into the car and bolt it," I shouted to Raynor, thinking an attempt was about to be made to rescue the prisoner.

The touring car left just as a Barton taxi flashed into the driveway. The driver was swearing loudly at one of the Tyringham veterans who had wedged himself into the door of the machine.

Searles jumped out (I had forgotten that he might arrive that night), but before I could greet him he swung round and assisted a lady to alight—a short, stout lady in a traveling cap wrapped in a coat that fell to her heels. She began immediately to deliver orders in an authoritative tone as to the rescue of her belongings. Searles dived into the taxi and began dragging out a vast amount of small luggage, but my attention was diverted for a moment by Alice, who jumped down the steps and clasped her arms about the neck of the stout lady.

"Aunt Alice!" I heard her saying. "Why didn't you tell us to expect you?"

"Why didn't I tell you?" demanded the stout lady. "The moment you left me I knew I'd made a mistake in letting you come over here on one of your absurd larks! And from the row I had getting into this country I judge that you're at your old tricks. Fired upon! Treated as though I were an outlaw! You shall never go out of my sight again!"

"Oh, please don't scold me!" Alice pleaded and turning to me: "This is Bob Singleton, your nephew."

Mrs. Bashford—and I made no question that Searles' companion was indubitably my uncle's widow—gave me her hand and smiled in a way that showed that she was not so greatly displeased with Alice as her words implied.

"Pay that driver for me and don't fail to tip him. Those Methuselahs at the gate all but killed him. It was only the vigorous determination of this gentleman, who very generously permitted me to share the only motor at the station, that I got through the gates alive! I beg your pardon, but what is your name?"

"Mrs. Bashford," I interposed, "my friend, Mr. Searles."

"Mr. Searles!" cried Alice, dropping a cage containing some weird Oriental bird which had been among my aunt's impedimenta. The bird squawked hideously.

"Miss Violet Dewing, permit me to present the author of 'Lady Larkspur'!"

It was a week later that Alice and I sat on the stone wall watching the waves, at the point forever memorable as the scene of our first talk.

"Aunt Alice isn't playing fair," she said. "She pretends now that it was all my idea—coming over to play at being our uncle's widow, but she really encouraged me to do it so I could give her an impartial judgment of your character. I'm her only niece and her namesake, and she relies on me a good deal. You know she's very, very rich, and she had never any idea of keeping your uncle's money. She meant all the while to give it to you —provided she found you were nice. And she thinks you are very nice."

"Your own opinion of me would be interesting," I suggested.

She had gathered a handful of pebbles and was flinging them fitfully at a bit of driftwood. I wished her tips hadn't that little quiver that preluded laughter and that her eyes were not the haven of all the dreams in the world.

She landed a pebble on the target before replying.

"You are very nice, I think," she said with disconcerting detachment. "At first I was afraid you didn't like nonsense, but you really got through very well, considering the trouble I caused you. But I'm in trouble myself now. Papa will land tomorrow. He's the grandest, dearest man in all this world, but when he finds that I'm going to stay in Mr. Searles' play he will be terribly cut up. Of course it will not be for long. Even if it's a big success, I'm to be released in three months. Constance and Sir Cecil think I owe it to myself to appear in the piece; that's good enough to say nobody else can do it so well—which is a question. I'm going to give all the money I earn to the blind soldiers."

(I wished the tears in her eyes didn't make them more lovely still!)

"Being what you are and all you are, it would be brutal for me to add to the number of things you have to tell your father. I'm a very obscure person, and he is a gentleman of title and otherwise distinguished. You are the Honorable Miss——"

"Papa has said numbers of times," she began softly, looking far out across the blue Sound—"he has said, oh, very often, that he'll never stop troubling about me until—until I'm happily married."

"When you came here you wore a wedding ring." I remarked casually.

"It was only a 'property' ring, to help me deceive you. I bought it in Chicago. When Aunt Alice came I threw it away."

"The finger seems lonesome without it," I said. "If I get you another, I hope you'll take better care of it."

"If you should put it there," she replied, looking fixedly at the hand, "that would be very, very different."

(THE END.)

Christmas Boxes In 1419.

That the problem of the Christmas box is no new one is shown by a document quoted in the journal of the Bribery and Secret Commissions Prevention League. In 1419, according to Mr. H. T. Riley's "Memorials of London and London Life," a regulation was made forbidding "Sergeants and other officers of the Mayor, Sheriffs, or City" to beg for Christmas gifts. In Latin, the decree runs—"Forasmuch as it is not becoming or agreeable to propriety that those who are in the service of reverend men, and from them or through them, have the advantage of befitting food and clothing, and also of reward or remuneration in a competent degree, should, after a perverse custom, be begging aught of people, alike paupers and seeing that in times past, every year at the Feast of Our Lord's Nativity (December 25th), according to a certain custom, which has grown to be a nuisance, the valiets of the Mayor, the Sheriffs and the Chamber of the said city—persons who have food, raiment and appropriate advantages, resulting from their office—under color of asking for an oblation, have begged many sums of money of brewers, bakers, cooks, and other victuallers; and in some instances have more than once threatened wrongfully to do them an injury if they should refuse to give them something, and have frequently made promises to others that in return for a present they would pass over their misdoings in mute silence; to the great dishonor of their masters, and to the common loss of all the city; Therefore, on Wednesday, the last day of April, in the seventh year, etc., by William Sevenok, the Mayor, and the Aldermen of London, it was ordered and established that no valiet, officer or sergeant of the Mayor, Sheriffs, or City, should in future beg or require of any person, of any rank, under color of an oblation, on pain of losing his office."

People With Strange Fears.

Many people suffer from strange fears. Some quite ordinary object may inspire a usually normal person with abject terror.

These fears are known as "phobias." Perhaps the most common is the fear of the dark. An expert, Mr. Millais Culpin, describes the case of a man with several million decorations who was stricken with terror by the buzz of a fly or bee.

Lord Roberts' phobia was cats. A similar case is that of a woman who declared that the sight of a cat affected the nerves of her spine. It was found on investigation that she had two phobias, one towards the black cats and the other towards the tabby variety. She was treated and cured.

One man would always run up a side street whenever he saw a horse fall. He was inspired by the fear of something unknown. It is, however, not a case of phobia if a man who has been kicked by a horse avoids places where a similar occurrence is likely to happen. He is guided by his reason, though his caution may be exaggerated.

Tale of a Homely Heir.

A good yarn, illustrating a certain phase of American social life, was told the other day by Miss Kitty Doner, from the New York Winter Garden, who is now appearing in London, England.

A young man, the son of a millionaire industrial magnate out there, became enamored of a girl in the beauty chorus of a revue, and proposed marriage to her.

He was not much to look at, but as he was well off and not a bad fellow at heart, the lady graciously accepted him. Later on he introduced his intended to her future father-in-law.

"Dad," said the young man proudly, "this is my future wife. What do you think of her?"

The old man eyed the radiant vision of splendid womanhood for some sixty seconds. Then, turning to his altogether ordinary-looking son, he said deliberately:

"Well, my boy, I can only say that you have shown much better taste than she has."

Why the Hen Cackles.

The accepted explanation of the cackling in which a hen indulges after laying an egg is that she is so pleased that she wants everyone to know it.

The rooster answers the cackle with a crow, and this is taken as further indication that both are immensely proud of the achievement. This explanation is not tenable.

If the question is considered fairly, it is easy to see that instinct would teach the hen that to cackle is to call the attention of the enemy to both herself and her embryo offspring, which she would naturally avoid doing.

The cackle is a relic of bygone days when fowls were not domesticated and ran about wild. When the hen wished to lay she retired from the rest of the fowl community and performed the task.

By the time she was ready to rejoin the commonwealth the other members had wandered some distance, and she did not know where they were. She waited till she had gone some distance from the egg in order not to endanger it, and then cackled, after also having taken a good look round to assure herself that no enemies were near.

The rooster, hearing the cackle, answered it by a crow, and thus informed the hen of the whereabouts of the tribe. This sort of thing may be seen now among the ancestors of our domestic fowl in the Malay countries and India.

Canada's Representation.

Canada will in the future be represented in London on official occasions by five instead of four men. The High Commissioner has followed the Australian practice of associating the agents-general of the provinces with him in the discharge of some of his duties. Mr. Howard, of Nova Scotia, will represent Canada on the War Graves' Commission; Dr. Peletier, of Quebec, will be the representative on the Imperial Institute; Mr. Noxon, of Ontario, will serve in relation to the Imperial War Museums, and Mr. Wade, of British Columbia, will serve on the committees of the British Empire Exhibition and the Imperial Air Congress.

The agents-general hope that this may prove a stepping stone to the restoration of their constitutional right of access to the crown in relation to provincial affairs which the Dominion has refused to acknowledge since Lord Strathcona's time.

YARNS OF YESTERDAY.

When Sir Herbert Tree Went On the Music Hall Stage.

On one occasion Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree was induced to play a sketch at a well-known London music hall, and went there one afternoon to rehearse, accompanied by Lady Tree.

As he wandered about the unfamiliar stage, feeling very bored and looking like a fish out of water, a couple of "knockabout" comedians who had just finished their turn approached him.

"Well met, Sir 'Erb!" exclaimed the first one, slapping him heartily on the back. "Glad to welcome you 'ere!"

"Oh, delighted!" murmured Tree vaguely.

"This is my mate, 'Arry," continued the other.

"Pleased to meet you," declared the second comedian, delivering an equally vigorous slap to Tree's shoulder. "Welcome to the 'alls. Is the missus showing with you?"

With a magnificent gesture Tree signalled to his wife. "Maud," he said, "allow me to introduce my new friends. Lady Tree—the Two Smacks!"

Another good story told by Mr. Reginald Auberon in "The Nineteen Hundreds" concerns Sir Charles Wyndham.

When Sir Charles was once playing in David Garrick, he used to go to the Garrick Club in the afternoon and take his seat immediately underneath a portrait of the original David Garrick that hung in the smoking-room.

One day a member, seeing him in his customary chair, stared hard at the canvas above his head.

"Upon my word," he said, "it's really extraordinary. I think you grow more like Garrick every afternoon."

"Very good of you to say so," returned Wyndham, hugely pleased.

"Yes," was the reply, "and less like him every evening."

Here is a characteristic anecdote about Andrew Carnegie.

The dour old Scotsman once received a letter stating that an old schoolfellow of his had fallen on evil days; that although about sixty years had passed since they were boys together, it was possible that he still remembered him, and that doubtless he would be glad to subscribe to a fund that was being raised for his benefit, and so on, and so on, in the approved style of such epistles.

But Carnegie wasn't having any. "I remember you fellow you mention," he wrote back. "I ken him fine. We were at school together. I detested him then, and I detest him now, and I won't give him a bawbee."

Still at War!

Not long ago the authorities of the Isle of Man protested against being called upon to make certain contributions to the Exchequer on the ground that the island had not been included in the Peace Treaty amongst those who were no longer at war with Germany and Austria! Technically, therefore, the Isle of Man is still at war.

There have been one or two previous omissions of towns and small countries from peace treaties that ended great wars.

Berwick-on-Tweed is an independent borough which comes under neither England nor Scotland. In Acts of Parliament it is mentioned separately. By some mischance its name was omitted from the parties to the treaty which ended the Crimean War. Hence, technically, Berwick has been at war with Russia for three-quarters of a century.

There is in Italy a tiny republic called San Marino. It came in with the rest of Italy in the war with Austria in 1848, but by mistake was left out of the treaty. During the recent conflict the republic resumed hostilities; she had no need to declare war.

Disabled Soldiers.

Disabled ex-service men in England who receive disability pensions number 900,000. Thirty thousand British firms have undertaken to employ such men to a fixed percentage of their total employes. Against this large number of private employers who sought to help is to be contrasted the fact that only about one-third of the public authorities employing labor have entered into the undertaking.—The Nation's Business.

Horn Sounded 1,000 Years.

Ripon, England, keeps up a custom one thousand years old. Every night a "wakeman," attired in official costume, appears before the mayor's house and blows three solemn notes on the "horn of Ripon."

WHITE ELK IN LONDON.

How Famous Indian Chief Impressed the Britishers.

The following item appeared recently in the Daily Graphic.—

The most picturesque person in Wonderful London yesterday was Chief White Elk, chief of the Cherokee Indians, who is paying his first visit to England. White Elk shows his good sense by traveling about in a taxi-cab. His wonderful costume would impede his progress too much.

The chief was trapped by a woman reporter as he alighted from a lift in Regent Street yesterday afternoon. He laughed heartily when she said she had been hunting him for two days.

"Is that what women do in England?" he asked, turning to his secretary. "Fancy women hunting men!"

White Elk has a fairer skin than many Frenchmen, piercing dark eyes, and a tall, slight, commanding figure. His feathered headgear made him appear taller than he really is. Over his exquisitely embroidered costume he wore a black Persian lamb coat. A beautiful silver medallion hung around his neck. White Elk's wife was a Californian.

"I have come to London simply for a pleasure trip," said the chief. "I hope to have an audience of his Majesty, but, please, don't imagine I have any grievance to talk about. While I am in England I intend to learn all I can about education, with a view to improving the educational system of mine own people. This is what I want to discuss with the King."

White Elk is the last hereditary chief of the Cherokees, for his only son died not long ago.

"My people were the first real Canadians," he said. "We are descended from the Iroquois, who inhabited North America long before any European races came to our shores." This was said in a deep, musical voice with a slight Canadian accent.

"London is a great surprise to me," said the chief. "It is larger and much more wonderful than I imagined. I don't think New York compares with it."

Canadians will be interested in the reference to the slight Canadian accent. What is it? We are most curious to know. Twice in one week it has been referred to in a London paper. "He speaks with a Canadian accent," was written the other day of a "lunatic named Owen Murray," described as "likely to be very violent," who had escaped from a mental hospital near Canterbury. And today we publish a story of the journalistic capture of Chief White Elk, who, on a visit to old London, was so careless as to speak to the interviewer with a "slight Canadian accent," though surely no slight could have been intended.

Laborites Finds It Costly.

Many of the new Labor members of the British Parliament are beginning to think they made an economic mistake when they succumbed to the lure of a political career. The official salary of an M.P. is £400 a year—roughly $2,000 at the normal rate of exchange. But even where a Laborite was making considerably less than this as a mere trade union worker, the additional personal and business expense entailed by a seat in the House is almost certain to turn his increased pay into a net loss. There is one glaring exception, however; the case of a Labor member who, until his recent election, was drawing unemployment pay—about $3 a week for himself, with smaller sums for his wife and each child.

There is already a lot of grumbling by the Laborites about the high cost of making the nation's laws, to those who make them.

Protect Plants.

It appears from testimony afforded by scientists, both in America and Europe, that we are face to face with the possibility of treating some of the diseases of plants in a way similar to that in which animals are rendered immune to attacks of illness. In this relation there may be cited the experiments of Beauverie, who permitted cuttings of begonia to grow in earth impregnated with a species of fungus which is an attenuated form of the botrytis cinerea, a destructive parasite of plants. After impregnation the begonia plants were subjected to attack by the parasite and resisted it perfectly. Similar results have been obtained by other experimenters.

By actual test, made by Canada's leading chemist, "Pure-Test Aspirin" comes first. For sale in Napanee, only at WALLACE'S.

NOVEL NEWSPAPERS.

Paper Shortage and High Wages Did Not Stop Publication.

We in the older parts of Canada, accustomed to our morning and evening papers, rarely think of the peculiar circumstances in which people of other and less fortunate lands have their news-sheets produced.

There used to be published in the Deccan, India, a daily newspaper which had probably an unique and useful fate. Every morning it was lithographed on a sheet of white cotton, Then it was sent round, and its subscribers having perused it, were free to use it as an ordinary pocket handkerchief—which they did.

There was only one stipulation. When they had finished with their copy of the paper, they were required to send it to the local laundry, whence it returned a clean sheet, and was then sent back to the publishers. Thus the same sheet was used many times and the cost of production kept down as low as possible.

In a far-away corner of Canada—Prince Albert, a remote village north of the prairie provinces—a weekly newspaper used to be issued by an enterprising man, who was alike editor, proprietor, reporter, advertising canvasser, commercial manager, artist, and printer.

He used to collect the local news and then write it out. The journal was all in his handwriting, and he illustrated it with cartoons and pictorial advertisements. He produced a number of copies by writing the original in a deep purple ink and then making other copies by means of a gelatine press, known as a hectograph.

Curiously enough, the paper had a great influence in the locality, for its "leaders" were strong, incisive, and plain, and the people regarded the pressman with some awe and no little respect for being able to "write so well."

Moreover, as the fame of the little four-paged sheet spread, it was eagerly looked for in the newspaper offices of Eastern Canada for the news it contained, and frequent quotations were made from it in the columns of its more elaborately produced contemporaries in other parts of the world.

Leaped Into Cabinet.

For a member, on the very first moment of his parliamentary life, to take his seat on the Treasury Bench is something new. The feat was achieved by Mr. Douglas Hogg, K.C., the Attorney-General. He has managed another—in this case semi-record. From the position of a private practitioner of the law he has jumped into the post of Senior Law Officer of the Crown. Mr. Richard Webster (Lord Alverstone) is the only modern instance hitherto.

Douglas Hogg was thirty when in 1902 he began life at the Bar. And he had seen many phases of life in the eleven years intervening between his departure from Eton, where he was captain of Oppidans, and his choice of a final profession.

From Eton Douglas Hogg went to study sugar-growing in the West Indies and British Guiana. After that he spent eight years in commercial life. Such experiences, especially after the velvet path of success at a great public school, test a young man; teach him affairs and men as he could never hope to learn either by tumbling, as so many do, into the professional status of barrister at the age, say, of 22, when fresh from the university.

Very early his commercial training proved its value to his professional work. In fifteen years (1902-17) he worked his way into one of the leading junior practices of the substantial kind; and as a leader from 1917 till his appointment as Attorney-General he has kept in the very front rank. He is quiet, lucid, forcible, and seems to have the great gift (the greatest for a lawyer, perhaps) of patience.

They Were Courteous.

Reports which have been circulated, that it was through the press that the Egyptian Government first learned of the recent discovery in the Valley of the Kings, are definitely contradicted by an authoritative statement recently issued. This is gratifying because the opposite insinuations would give the impression that the excavators showed a lack of courtesy to the Egyptian authorities. As a matter of fact, when the first entrance was opened the Inspector of Antiquities was present, while when the inner door was cut through and the excavators ascertained what was inside a special messenger was sent within half an hour across the river to apprise him of the findings. On an occasion such as this, nothing is lost and much may be gained by paying due attention to the amenities of civility.

THE KERCHIEF FAD

Accessory Is Now Used to Decorate Dresses and Hats.

Batik Printed Squares for Blouses and Head Bands—Fashion May Reach Resorts.

Paris has gone quite mad over the printed silk handkerchief and is using it for decorative purposes on dresses and hats, writes a correspondent in the New York Tribune.

The big shops are selling the batik printed squares for blouses and head bands. A prominent shop with a window full of lovely printed styles shows a handkerchief bracelet. Thus none of its value as a decorative note is overlooked.

So serious are some manufacturers about the importance of the vogue that they are beginning to slacken their efforts on printed linen handkerchiefs and will concentrate on silk. Many of the best designs are in batik print, but there is, of course, much printed from hand-cut wooden blocks of oriental origin.

The present vogue for the handkerchief as a trimming is an interesting example of the difficulty of creating a fashion without the support of some well known designer. It also illustrates the fact that great designers very often receive credit for originating a fashion which really emanated from the brain of a practically unheard-of dressmaker. A year ago the handkerchief was used, especially in girdle form, as a trimming for outdoor clothes and also as a connecting link between the sweater and the skirt, which were often in contrasting colors, in which case they were brought together by a handkerchief in a color to match the skirt.

These ideas were advanced by smaller dressmakers last midwinter, but at that time received little notice. It is likely that the present craze for handkerchief trimmings will have a strong influence on fashions for Southern wear this winter and that picturesque effects will be worked out, as in this type of costume the designer has practically no restraint in regard to gay colors and striking patterns.

IDEAS FOR SPRING WARDROBE

Many of the stores throughout the country are beginning to show touches of spring in their displays, as a lure to those who are intending to go to winter resorts. The practical-minded maid, although she will stay in her own clime during the colder months will gather ideas for her spring ward robe and can set her dressmaker at work. The coat shown is made of white honeycomb eponge and is bound at sleeves and bottom with scarlet flannel, which is also used for the collar.

THE GALAXY OF NEW BLOUSES

Three-Piece Suit Brings in Some of the Most Elaborate and Winsome Garments.

With the passing of the two-piece suit for formal wear, the three-piece suit brings in some of the most elaborate and beautiful blouses seen in many a year. Indeed, it is to be wondered if waists have ever been as rich in detail and as handsome in material and cut as they are now.

The blouse of the three-piece suit either matches the suit or complements it in color—usually the former. An attractive three-piece suit of crepe de chine has a matching jacket-blouse of matelasse, and a cape-coat over it trimmed with brown caracul. It is the very latest suit model, even in color, which is brown.

Two jacket-blouses are shown, one of brown matelasse, caught in about the waist with a narrow band of metal cloth. The peplum is slit over each hip. The sleeves are bell-shaped, and the coatee over them naturally follows in line.

The waist beneath is also of matelasse in all-over design. A revers, belt and circular sleeve frill are of crepe de chine.

It is to be noted in a great many of the jacket-blouses that the neck lines are frequently, if not generally, V shape. This shape is vying with the bateau neckline for popular favor.

The Mussel.

During one stage of its life, the mussel attaches itself to the gills and fins of fish, and for from ten to forty days leads an indolent life, feeding on the tissues of its foster parent.

The "Motner" Tongue.

Teacher: "Do you know why we call our language the mother tongue?"

Bright child: "Because father never gets a change to use it."

CHIC OUTFIT FOR TRAVELING

The coat and skirt of this charming traveling suit are of almond green haircloth, while the costume blouse is of sand-colored Jersey cloth, with a monogram of Japanese letters enclosed in an embroidered circle at the left front, in self color. Smart hat of almond green felt trimmed in brightly colored chenille embroidery is worn. The scarf is of gray fox.

JERSEY FROCK HOLDS FAVOR

Garment Is the Essence of Simplicity and Good Taste; One of the Most Practical.

School girls, college girls and business girls should feel extremely grateful to the originator of the jersey frock. The lines and details of this type of dress vary from season to season, but the essentials of simplicity, good taste and appropriateness are always retained. It is one of the most attractive and practical models ever designed. Remember the furore the first jersey dress with its plain overblouse and plaited skirt created? It had a success unequaled by costumes of greater cost and greater formality. In a way it put an end to overdressing which used to be noticeable among business girls. Adopted by the debutantes of society, by girls at the smartest boarding schools, and by business girls, who quickly realized its charm of line and color, this particular jersey model was the forerunner of other frocks of the same character.

One of these smartly simple jersey frocks was a very popular model at a fashion showing of appropriate and smart clothes for business women.

A monogram embroidered in contrasting shades of self or wool as a trimming motif gives a touch of individuality. The fashion of putting monograms on blouses or sport frocks is new and extremely pretty, especially when it is done in bright colors on blouses of white crepe de chine.

Another model also of jersey has a plaited skirt and an overblouse embroidered in harmonizing or contrasting shades.

Even simpler is a dress which requires only three yards of jersey and may be made at home by the amateur seamstress. It is made in one piece and has short kimono sleeves. Around the neck and sleeves it is blanket-stitched in wool. The pockets are stitched to the skirt with long darning stitches. A narrow string sash finished at the ends with a touch of wool embroidery completes a satisfactory and practical little frock.

LATTICEWORK FOR FOOTGEAR

Decorations May Appear on Sides or Front of Shoe or Serve in Place of Tongue.

Latticework is lavishly employed in various ways on footwear. It may appear on the sides or front of the shoe or serve in place of a tongue. A lattice effect is often obtained through an application of strips of leather of a contrasting color. Appliqued strips of black patent leather are frequently applied to gray or black suede. One manufacturer is now showing black and colored patent leather shoes with enameled motifs.

Gorgeous gold and silver brocades and colored velvets and satins are used for evening slippers. Velvets are sometimes combined with lame. Tongues of velvet, buckles of rhinestones and colored stone ornaments as well as chiffon, lace and buckle effects are used as trimmings on these. On some of the more elaborate slippers stones are set into the heels.

James Watt.

The horsepower unit was established by James Watt, and the figures were settled in a curious way. Watt, in his usual careful manner, proceeded to find out the average which the horses of his district could perform, and he found that the raising of 22,000 pounds one foot per minute was about an actual horsepower. At this time Watt was employed in the manufacture of engines. Customers were so hard to find that all kinds of artificial encouragements were considered necessary to induce power users to buy steam engines. As a method of encouraging business, Watt offered to sell engines reckoning 33,000 foot pounds to the horsepower, or one-third more than the usual. And thus, what was intended as a temporary expedient to promote business, has been the means of giving a false unit of very important measurement to the world.

Here and There

Renfrew, Ont.—Mr. Ritchie, the station agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has received instructions from headquarters to rigidly enforce the no trespassing order on the property of this company. This is particularly in reference to people walking down the railway track. When accidents happen it always entails a trouble to the company and lately there have been complaints that school children have been using the railway as a thoroughfare.

Vancouver.—"I have been in the Alps and the Pyrenees, but I have never seen anything that can compare with Banff," said William Faversham, famous English actor, when speaking at Hotel Vancouver.

Mr. Faversham spoke of the wonderful international dog races staged at the winter carnival, and said that he had on special invitation visited the great motion picture plant at Banff.

Inveremere, B.C.—An appropriation had been passed for the building of a depot at Lake Windermere by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Lake Windermere is the depot for the whole of the Lake Windermere district. It enjoys the distinction of being the only station on the Lake Windermere branch between Golden and Fort Steele, which has enjoyed the benefit of an agent since December, 1914. A modest little portable depot, a box car on the ground, has done duty all these years but with the proposed opening of the Banff-Windermere road on the thirtieth of June, it is no doubt thought that it is time the old box car took a move.

Ottawa.—The Canadian National Parks Branch of the Department of the Interior is commencing the construction of a hydro-electric generating station in Cascade creek in Banff National Park to supply light and power for the town of Banff, Alberta. The dam at the outlet of Lake Minnewanka constructed in 1912 to provide storage facilities, will be utilized and will ensure a steady flow of water for power purposes without further impairing the scenic attractions of the locality. Electric power for Banff is at present obtained from the steam plant of the Bankhead Mines. The work will be undertaken by day labor.

Winnipeg.—Seven thousand cars of grain have been loaded between September 1, 1922, and Feb. 1, 1923, for the western coast by the Canadian Pacific Railway. This represents 10,234,000 bushels of grain for export from Vancouver. The shipments comprised 6,175 cars of wheat, 162 oats, 16 barley and 50 rye. Exports from the western coast were destined as follows: The Orient, 896,880 bushels, and the United Kingdom 987,905 bushels. As at January 31, there were 900,000 bushels of Canadian Pacific grain in the elevator at Vancouver and 500 cars in transit carrying 735,000 bushels of wheat. The present movement west is averaging 25 cars a day.

Fort William.—The contract for the construction of a building to replace number five freight shed, was awarded by Canadian Pacific Railway officials to the C[illegible]r-Hall-Aldinger Company, of Winnipeg. It provides for two fire walls which will divide the new structure into three compartments.

The new dock along the new shed will be of concrete. It is the present intention to use the end of the shed nearest the Canadian Pacific Railway subway for the handling of local freight instead of the end nearest the city subway dock as was the with the old shed. It has been decided that the new arrangement will be more satisfactory to company officials and to concerns having business with them.

Discussing the new shed to-day, D. C. Chisholm, division superintendent, said that the new structure would be of frame construction very much like the shed it will replace, aside from the fire walls and the concrete wharf.

Winnipeg.—Under the auspices of the railways, the provincial government and livestock associations of the province, two livestock improvement trains, similar to those which toured the province last year, will again be operated in Manitoba during the coming summer.

The 1923 trains are to be known as "the Livestock Improvement Trains." They will give attention to the following departments: The benefit of improved quality in cattle: demonstration and sale of pure-bred sires, both beef and dairy breeds; the production of fodder crops; the dehorning of cattle and other work in connection with the cattle industry; the breeding, feeding and marketing of bacon hogs; the demonstration of desirable mutton types and docking and castration of lambs; demonstrations and [illegible]tures on poultry raising, with the selling of eggs for hatching purposes; home economic lectures and demonstrations for women and lectures and education motion pictures for girls and boys.

The dates for the trains will be from Monday, April 30, onward for four weeks. This will cover about the same dates as last year which were found very satisfactory.

Sanitation In Bombay.

Inauguration a short while ago by the Governor of the Presidency of Bombay, Sir George Lloyd, of the first stage in an immense project for the sanitary regeneration of the city of Bombay, marks the beginning of one of the most ambitious plans ever developed for the improvement of a single municipal area. It will be remembered that the city stands on a narrow spit of land running out southwards into the sea, which means that the problem of expansion is especially difficult. Hence one of the chief plans is the reclamation of 1,200 acres from the sea on the west side of the spit, whereby the city will be made six times as wide as it is at present at its narrowest part. No new factories are to be built in the city itself, but outer suburbs and satellite industrial towns are to be constructed in regions which are now paddy fields, swamp or jungle. The two railways are being quadruple-tracked and electrified, so that they will be able to carry 20,000 passengers an hour in rush hours from the new suburbs into the city. The work, it is hoped, will be completed in 1929. To those who still regard India as a very backward country this news may be a surprise.

BACK ACHED TERRIBLY

Mrs. McMahon Tells How She Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Chatham, Ont.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a run-down condition after the birth of my baby boy. I had terrible pains and backache, and was tired and weak, not fit to do my work and care for my three little children. One day I received your little book and read it, and gave up taking the medicine I had and began taking the Vegetable Compound. I feel much better now and am not ashamed to tell what it has done for me. I recommend it to any woman I think feels as I do." —Mrs. J. R. McMahon, 153 Harvey St., Chatham, Ont.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has for nearly fifty years been restoring sick, ailing women to health and strength. It relieves the troubles which cause such symptoms as backache, painful periods, irregularities, tired, worn-out feelings and nervousness. This is shown again and again by such letters as Mrs. McMahon writes, as well as by one woman telling another. These women know, and are willing to tell others, what it did for them; therefore, it is surely worth your trial.

Women who suffer should write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Cobourg, Ontario, for a free copy of Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women." C

DICKENS THE REPORTER.

Famous Novelist Once Worked on a Newspaper.

"When Lord Derby was beginning his brilliant political career—he was then Mr. Stanley — Charles Dickens was one of a corps of reporters who were detailed to follow him, and with the utmost expedition to forward verbatim reports of all his speeches on the Morning Chronicle in London," says Mrs. James T. Fields in her diary, published in Harper's Magazine.

"Dickens often went by post-chaise to Edinburgh, and, after listening to a speech, transcribed his note feverishly all the way back to London. At each station a man on horseback would stand ready to seize the sheets that he had prepared, and to ride ahead with them. Often and often the work would make Dickens deadly sick, and he would have to plunge his head out of the window. Still he continued to write. He used little slips of paper that he held in front of him; he would rest his body on the edge of the seat and his paper on the front of the window underneath the lamp. As the coach reached the station a sudden plunge into a bag of sovereigns that he kept handy for the purpose would pay the postboy, another plunge behind him would gather up the completed pages, and a third plunge into a bag on the other side would give him the fresh paper to carry forward the inexorable, unremitting work.

"One parliamentary speech of Mr. Stanley's that he was particularly anxious to have taken down verbatim proved on publication to be all nonsense, except the beginning and the end, which were the parts that Dickens had reported. Stanley summoned Dickens to his room, and said to him that he wished to go over the whole speech.

"'I told him that we would begin at once,' said Dickens. 'He tried to induce me to sit elsewhere or more comfortably, but at that time in the House of Commons there was nothing but one's knees to write on, and I had formed the habit of it. Without further pause then he began, and went on hour after hour to the end, often becoming very much excited, bringing down his hand with violence upon the desk near which he stood, and rising at the end into great eloquence."

He Felt Like Fainting.

Dr. Temple Stannage Boyle, president of King's College, Windsor, Nova Scotia, was for many years in parochial work in Ontario and Quebec before returning to collegiate work. He has many good stories of his experiences with parishioners, and others, particularly with others, and intimates that he had the shock of his life on one occasion when performing a wedding ceremony.

All went as usual until the man was asked whether he wanted this woman for his lawful wedded wife. The response was "No." The question was repeated and the answer was even more emphatic, "No, I do not want to." A third time the usual question was put by the astonished clergyman and still the response came, "I don't want to."

Dr. Boyle at once declared the wedding off and ushered the man into the vestry, where some other pointed questions were asked. The explanation was that the couple had broken off the engagement some time earlier by mutual consent, but that the old-fashioned father of the girl had insisted, against his daughter's wishes, that the wedding be gone on with. Lacking the courage to beard the girl's father, the young man took counsel from others who advised that he make public his purpose in a way which would end things, once and for all.

Whereupon Dr. Boyle reserved comment, except to admit that he was sorry for the couple. Long experience in the pastorate had not been wasted by one who was quite willing to learn that human nature has many unexpected turns. Dr. Boyle was for years attached to the staff of Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal, and of Trinity College, Toronto. He was once rector of St. Paul's Church, Wingham. His birthplace is St. Catharines.

"War Against War."

"War Against War" is the caption of an official bulletin sent by the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada Executive Council to all its affiliated unions. The bulletin asks its unions to consider the use of anti-war stamps on all their official correspondence. It urges that the workers of Canada should not be behind those of other countries in actively interesting themselves in the matter. Posters and pamphlets are to be prepared for distribution and other measures initiated from time to time to energetically carry on international anti-war propaganda throughout the world.

NEW EASTER AND SPRING MILLINERY HAS MANY INTERESTING AND UNIQUE PHASES

"The Poke" by all odds is the best bet from a style standpoint. These newer small shapes which shade the eyes, just seem to fit and look astonishingly well on a great number of people.

These "Poke" styles are developed in a wide assortment of paisley straws and paisley silks that blend splendidly with suits, coats and dresses.

Flowers, ribbons, feathers and quills play important roles where trimmings are concerned. Usually these varied ornamentations are found in most unthinkable and original places about the hat, which all goes for increased individuality and charm.

THE THREE-PIECE SUIT IS AGAIN IN THE SPOT-LIGHT

WE ARE SHOWING SEVERAL EXCEPTIONAL STYLES

This very clever suit is meeting wonderful success because it pleasingly meets the requirements of milady from early morning, when she goes shopping, through the noon hour, over the afternoon tea-cups and right up to the dinner hour.

These garments are made from the finest and costliest of materials, only the best of everything is used, linings are as exquisite as the outside of costumes themselves.

Usually they come with waist of contrasting color attached to the skirt, occasionally however, the waist is separate.

Most frequently the coats of these suits are short and in hip-band or Jaquette style. Beautiful embroidery, ribbing and eyelet work creates pleasing ornamentation.

Navy Blue is the outstanding color.
